IMPORTANT MEMORANDUM

NAIRO Academic Affairs Committee

Date: 5/9/69

Subject: REPLIES TO QUESTIONNAIRES ARE URGENTLY NEEDED.

We have an excellent lead for obtaining funds for our professional training project, but it would be self defeating to apply until we can make a better show of the interest and cooperation of NAIRO practitioners.

Less than half of those selected to participate by responding to the questionnaires have replied. This is not adequate for a truly professional study. We do apologize for the length of the questionnaire - if we must.

It will be impossible to start on Phase II, a pilot study, until we have a substantial base of practical experience to make the academic programs relevant. You are very special in this effort. Please let us hear from you immediately.

MEMORANDUM February 25, 1969

To: NAIRO Committee on Policy Procedures

From: Paul Anthony
Executive Director, SRC

Enclosed is the statement which Harold Fleming promised to prepare for us. I think he has done an excellent job, and given us a valuable document with which to work. We should consider changing it, at least slightly I believe, keeping in mind the sensitivity of several groups and individuals and the ever-present opportunity for one's motives to be misunderstood.

Before we ended our Atlanta meeting Galen Martin handed me the following statement, which I think might very well be the summary of our purposes or it could be the introduction to any statement and/or recommendations we might make:

> "What methods can be utilized to provide maximum participation by the membership in determining the policies of the association as provided in Article III, Section 2, of the By-Laws?"

I hope you will share your comments with me as soon as possible, and that you will share them with the other members of this committee at the same time.

MEMORANDUM

To: Paul Anthony, chairman of NAIRO's special committee on annual conference procedures.

From: Harold C. Fleming

The Problem: Two kinds of complaints have been registered concerning NAIRO's policy-making procedures. The first, of longstanding, is that NAIRO is run by an "establishment" of old-timers who determine all significant actions of the board and the annual conference. The other, of more recent vintage, is that an organized and dissident minority -- a tiny fraction of the total membership -- can and has used the annual conference to initiate actions out of keeping with NAIRO's purposes and unrepresentative of the general membership. Basically, these add up to the same complaint -- that NAIRO's decision-making procedures are not responsive enough to the wishes of the membership as a whole.

One need not subscribe to charges of conspiracy or evil motives to conclude that there is merit to the criticism, whether it comes from left or right. As in most membership organizations, the main work is done and decisions made by a relatively small percentage of the membership, simply because most members are too busy or too apathetic to play an active role. "Let George do it" is the name of the game -- until some element in the organization gets upset about what "George" is doing or not doing.

The question, then, is not so much whether a relatively few people are exerting a disproportionate amount of leadership in NAIRO, but whether the general membership has full opportunity to serve as the court of last resort -- to originate, ratify, or reject internal policies and public positions.

Existing Structure and Procedures. In most respects, NAIRO's bylaws safeguard the ultimate sovereignty of the membership. The Nominating Committee is composed predominantly of chapter chairmen, who are elected by their respective memberships. The bylaws empower the board to authorize election of directors and officers by mail ballot -- and that is the practice that is followed. Notice of meetings, procedures for bylaw changes, and the like, are also protected against abuse.

In one major respect, however, the bylaws do not safeguard the principle of majority rule. Under the bylaws, annual and special membership meetings have almost unlimited power to act for the organization. Superficially this appears to be the most "democratic" of arrangements. In actual fact, this arrangement can lead to quite undemocratic results, for the following reasons:

1. It is a well-demonstrated fact that only a small percentage of the members attend any given annual meeting.

2. Worse, this limited attendance is not representative (at least geographically), because it is heavily weighted by members from the locality where the meeting is held.

3. Still worse, the bylaws provide that the board of directors may designate "any place" as the site of an annual or special meeting -- a power that offers much potential for manipulation if anyone wished to use it.

4. For the benefit of those who feel that the present arrangement is favorable to "anti-establishment" elements, it may be well to note that those who can most easily attend annual meetings, wherever they are held, are the senior professionals who are popularly supposed to make up the "establishment."

5. In any case, it is possible for an unrepresentative minority (old turks, young turks, non-turks, or whoever) to organize in advance and "stack" any given annual meeting.

Conclusions: Three alternatives present themselves:

1. Maintain the status quo. Despite the problems of the annual meeting, as discussed above, many organizations make do with this arrangement. But these are times of very serious ideological and emotional divisions in NAIRO's field of concern. We should ask ourselves very seriously whether we want to maintain a procedure that is basically unrepresentative, that invites factionalism within NAIRO, and that runs the risk of alienating a substantial part of the membership. (See communications in the wake of Philadelphia.)

2. Tighten up resolutions procedures. Many organizations have avoided grassroots or factional "revolts" by tight controls on resolutions. Typically, a resolutions committee receives all resolutions in advance and screens them according to "relevancy" and other criteria before they are presented to the conference. If resolutions from the floor are permitted at all, they usually must be backed by a petition of a prescribed number of members or they require a large percentage of votes to pass (e.g., two-thirds, three-fourths). This seems to me an undemocratic form of control that would be deeply resented by much of our membership.

a majority of those responding within 30 days.

3. Modify the bylaws to make it mandatory that all elections and policy positions be ratified by mail ballot of the entire membership. To safeguard against an unrepresentatively small response, a provision could be added that no action shall be official unless ballots are returned by at least fifty per cent of the membership; then a simple majority of those voting shall prevail. This alternative is by far the most democratic. The problem with it is that members, confronted with a wild array of resolutions that they have had no opportunity to discuss or consider in depth, often feel unequipped or unwilling to vote. To meet this problem, it would be possible to have the board (as the elected representatives of the membership) review all resolutions, vote on them, and communicate with each one the resulting board recommendations.

It will be argued that this procedure is cumbersome and time-consuming, and so it is. But there is no quick and easy way to assure that NAIRO's actions are fully thought through and are not at variance with majority sentiment. And, since it is not NAIRO's main purpose to take public positions on all the issues of the day, there is much to be said for making the process a deliberate and thoughtful one. The main thing is not to be beguiled by specious arguments that "democracy" is synonymous with unbridled individualism and anarchy, which is the danger at the moment.

Dear Paul:

In response to your letter sent to members of the NAIRO Committee on Policy Procedures, I think the statement of Harold Fleming is very well done. I agree that Galen Martin's statement would be an excellent introduction to any recommendations our committee might make.

In regard to Harold Fleming's memorandum, I would suggest that in the first paragraph the two sentences regarding the establishment and the organized and dissident minority be softened so that the polarization is not played up so much. It could be soft-pedaled by a comment to the effect that there are some members of the organization who feel that the policy-making procedures do not at present allow the representative voice of the general membership.

His section on existing structures and procedures is well done, and I have no particular suggestions for change there. On the conclusion section, I feel that our committee could stay within the framework of Harold's three points; yet it should perhaps come up with a definitive recommendation rather than pointing toward one conclusion which we hope the reader will arrive at on his own. It seems to me that this can be done by outlining the three alternatives (maintaining the status quo, tightening up the resolution procedures, and modifying the by-laws) and then presenting a specific recommendation on the most effective of the alternatives.

In the third alternative on modifying the by-laws, my own reaction would be against the provision requiring a return of at least 50% of the membership ballots. A smaller response might be unrepresentative; but it, nevertheless, would be representative of the really interested NAIRO members who take the time to fill out their ballot and send it in. I would want to strengthen the recommendation that the board then, after such a mail ballot, have the authority to review all resolutions or actions approved by the membership to determine whether they are pertinent to and in line with NAIRO's overall purposes.

I will be interested in hearing the responses from other members of the committee. If there is a need to discuss this statement with members of the policy procedures committee by phone in the near future, I can be reached at my home phone during the week of March 16-22 (913-321-4673). Dear Paul:

This letter is sent to you not only as an individual member or friend of the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials (NAIRO) but also as one who is employed by one of our foremost agencies or organizations in the field of intergroup relations.

Once again, as an individual but with the support of my agency, I have undertaken the responsibility of publishing a national NAIRO Membership Directory. This was done once before in 1967 and a copy of the front cover of that directory is enclosed to refresh your memory.

The publication of the 1969-70 NAIRO Membership Directory is currently under way and I am attempting to sell the back cover. It occurred to me that your organization or agency might be willing to support us in this venture by purchasing the back cover. The Membership Directory will go to each of the 1800 Members of NAIRO and your organization might have some need to advertise to these NAIRO members (either as a complimentary ad, an ad listing publications, services, etc.) Cost for the back cover is $200.

We are using top quality offset and our publication will be a first class printing job.

Please let me know if your agency or organization has an interest in this type of advertising and a willingness to help with this important NAIRO project.

DATE: February 25, 1969

I have attempted to read with care your memorandum of February 25, 1969, as well as the statements of Harold Fleming and Galen Martin. In addition, Jean Pavela's response has been read with equal care. As a result, I am in complete agreement with you in the beliefs that Harold Fleming has "given us a valuable document with which to work," and that Galen Martin's written suggestion could be "the summary of our purposes" or "introduction to any statement and/or recommendations we might make."

The following are my comments regarding both statements. However, I will deal with the statements individually, and at the same time keep in mind Jean's commentary on the subject.

In regard to Galen Martin's statement, I would recommend that it be the nucleus of a summary of the Committee's charge, and that the summary precede or introduce any discussion of alternative methods that "can be utilized to provide maximum participation by the membership" in determining policy.

I have purposely used the term "nucleus" because I left Atlanta with the distinct impression that the Committee was to prepare an objective list of alternatives and that the decision as to which alternative is most palatable would be left solely to the discretion of the membership. I am not suggesting that Galen's statement suggests non-objectivity; rather, I firmly believe that this aspect of our commitment should be explicated and not implied.

Secondly, Ed Howden's insistence on making the distinction that the Annual Meeting is a "conference" and not a "convention" is an important one. The fact that each year NAIRO hold's a conference limits the number of alternatives, most of which are in the Fleming statement, that the membership can consider. In other words, it is my opinion that the introductory statement should include some comment on this matter. If not, I am fearful that Chapters and individual members may come up with additional alternatives to change the basic structure of NAIRO, which is not our Committee's charge.

Lastly, it is my firm belief that the Committee show no preference for any one alternative. If the Board wishes to do so, that's a different matter. This is in keeping with my position that the Committee must remain strictly objective.

Harold Fleming's statement, I believe, outlines the alternatives quite well. However, I do have some concerns with the opening paragraph and with the presentation of alternatives.

My first concern is that if the Committee is going to enclose the term "establishment" in quotation marks, then the phrase "an organized and dissident minority -- a tiny fraction of the membership" should also be enclosed in quotation marks. This may be a minor point, but I maintain to leave the first paragraph as is, suggests that the remarks regarding the "establishment" are the complaints of persons other than the Committee, and that the comments regarding the "dissident minority" will be interpreted as those of the Committee. Either we enclose both phrases in quotations or write both without quotation marks.

My feelings regarding the sections on "existing structures and procedures" and "conclusions" are the same as Jean Pavela's.

A Report to the President of NAIRO from the Committee on Policy Procedures

The Purpose. -- To answer the question: "What methods can be utilized to provide maximum participation by the membership in determining the policies of the association as provided in Article III, Section 2, of the By-Laws?"

The Problem. -- Two kinds of complaints have been registered concerning NAIRO's policy-making procedures. The first, of longstanding, is that NAIRO is run by an "establishment" of old-timers who determine all significant actions of the board and the annual conference. The other, of more recent vintage, is that an organized and dissident minority -- a tiny fraction of the total membership -- can and has used the annual conference to initiate actions out of keeping with NAIRO's purposes and unrepresentative of the general membership. Basically, these add up to the same complaint -- that NAIRO's decision-making procedures are not responsive enough to the wishes of the membership as a whole.

One need not subscribe to charges of conspiracy or evil motives to conclude that there is merit to the criticism, whether it comes from left or right. As in most membership organizations, the main work is done and decisions made by a relatively small percentage of the membership, simply because most members are too busy or too apathetic to play an active role. "Let George do it" is the name of the game -- until some element in the organization gets upset about what "George" is doing or not doing.

The question, then, is not so much whether a relatively few people are exerting a disproportionate amount of leadership in NAIRO, but whether the general membership has full opportunity to serve as the court of last resort -- to originate, ratify, or reject internal policies and public positions.

Existing Structure and Procedures. -- In most respects, NAIRO's bylaws safeguard the ultimate sovereignty of the membership. The Nominating Committee is composed predominantly of chapter chairmen, who are elected by their respective memberships. The bylaws empower the board to authorize election of directors and officers by mail ballot -- and that is the practice that is followed. Notice of meetings, procedures for bylaw changes, and the like, are also protected against abuse.

In one major respect, however, the bylaws do not safeguard the principle of majority rule. Under the bylaws, annual and special membership meetings have almost unlimited power to act for the organization. Superficially this appears to be the most "democratic" of arrangements. In actual fact, this arrangement can lead to quite undemocratic results, for the following reasons:

(1) It is a well-demonstrated fact that only a small percentage of the members attend any given annual meeting.

(2) Worse, this limited attendance is not representative (at least geographically), b because it is heavily weighted by members from the locality where the meeting is held.

(3) Still worse, the bylaws provide that the board of directors may designate "any place" as the site of an annual or special meeting -- a power that offers much potential for manipulation if anyone wished to use it.

(4) For the benefit of those who feel that the present arrangement is favorable to "anti-establishment" elements, it may be well to note that those who can most easily attend annual meetings, wherever they are held, are the senior professionals who are popularly supposed to make up the "establishment."

(5) In any case, it is possible for an unrepresentative minority (old turks, young turks, non-turks, or whoever) to organize in advance and "stack" any given annual meeting.

Conclusions. -- Three alternatives present themselves:

(1) Maintain the status quo. Despite the problems of the annual meeting, as discussed above, many organizations make do with this arrangement. But these are times of very serious ideological and emotional divisions in NAIRO's field of concern. We should ask ourselves very seriously whether we want to maintain a procedure that is basically unrepresentative, that invites factionalism within NAIRO, and that runs the risk of alienating a substantial part of the membership. (See communications in the wake of Philadelphia.)

(2) Tighten up resolutions procedures. Many organizations have avoided grassroots or factional "revolts" by tight controls on resolutions. Typically, a resolutions committee receives all resolutions in advance and screens them according to "relevancy" and other criteria before they presented to the conference. If resolutions from the floor are permitted at all, they usually must be backed by a petition of a prescribed number of members or they require a large percentage of votes to pass (e.g., two-thirds, three-fourths). This seems to me an undemocratic form of control that would be deeply resented by much of our membership.

(3) Modify the bylaws to make it mandatory that all elections and policy positions be ratified by mail ballot of the entire membership. We recommend this last procedure with the provision that all resolutions introduced be discussed from the floor and voted on by the members in attendance at the annual meeting. The results of this vote would not be binding, but would be reported to all the members when the resolutions are mailed out with the mail ballot. This would give those members who were unable to attend the meeting an opportunity to know the thinking of the majority of those who did attend. So, too, before resolutions were mailed to the membership, they would be considered by the board and voted on. This vote would also not be binding, but would give the members an opportunity to know the thinking of the Board.

It will be argued that this procedure is cumbersome and time-consuming, and so it is. But there is no quick and easy way to assure that NAIRO's actions are fully thought through and are not at variance with majority sentiment. And, since it is not NAIRO's main purpose to take public positions on all the issues of the day, there is much to be said for making the process a deliberate and thoughtful one.

Dear Paul,

Sincere thanks and appreciation for all the work you have recently undertaken for NAIRO (really grateful). As for the conference in Rochester - lets make it a "shirt-sleeve working confab" with much opportunity to wrap up our "critical year of self-examination" for NAIRO. This means hearing from our Committee of 18, our National Commission, Board By-Law and Procedural recommendations and Task Forces. This will make for anything but a traditional national NAIRO Conference and members of the Board on Saturday questioned if your emphasis on Economic Development and Political Participation with speakers, etc., will be consistent with this thrust.

All for now - again, thanks good friend!

With warm regards,

Lloyd Davis

Dear Paul:

Greetings, good friend, from the Capital City on the Potomac where we are having highs at the 100° mark ! Woweee, it's somethnin !

As I mentioned to you, Ramsey Clark spoke today at the National Civil Liberties Clearing House; he did right well, as you would expect. The most frightening thing he said was that some legislation dealing with foundations would obviously be passed; he did add that the language used by IRS and the House Ways and Means Committee was not "legislative language" and would be modified; he urged all groups to stay in close touch on this matter and to make their positions known lest we lose by default.

One other thing he said that should gladden your heart was,

> "I see Wiley Branton is here. If the proposed legislation is passed the Voter Education Project would be killed. The VEP had greater impact than the '65 Voting Rights Act itself. Without it, the Voting Rights Act would have failed; the mere naked right to vote is far from adequate. There is a very real question if government may work at voter registration or education; VEP can and did a great job."

Not bad praise from the former Attorney General of the United States.

Mary Alice Baldinger said that she had also written you about coming up for Clark's talk; she asked me to say that she, too, was sorry you couldn't make it.

When I called t'other day, Mildred said you were at the doctor's taking some tests ? What's up ?

Warmest and best. As ever, Fred

The Role of the Private Agency

There are a multiplicity of private agencies, local, regional, and national, concerned with some facet of intergroup relations and most of them are growing substantially. So, too, new agencies -- particularly on the local level -- are being created at an unprecedented rate. The resources which these agencies represent should be of particular concern to those interested in social reform.

This is particularly true since it is generally assumed that, whatever the response to social ills from the public sector, there will not be adequate resources and programs from that sector to meet the needs of the country. To the extent that this assumption is correct the recognition of the private agency, its contribution and its potential, becomes all the more important.

Considerable and appropriate consideration is now being given to the skills and resources which can be brought to bear on social issues from the business sector. Further, President Nixon has called on all citizens and groups to join the Administration's efforts to eradicate need and prejudice in the country. In this situation, the existence and role of the private agency looms much larger than many are aware.

There are a number of ways in which the private agency can contribute. In considering these, two things should be kept in mind. The private agency by the nature of its structure and support is generally free of many of the pressures which exist with the public agency. And, the private agency more often than not is tax-exempt and thereby removed from the immediate area of politics and partisanship which to some degree are inevitable parts of the public agency.

The most conspicuous, and important, resources of the private agency are the funds and talent which they command. These funds, to be sure, are small compared to those for the public agency. Nevertheless, they are significant particularly in a time when all resources are limited and inadequate. The talent is an even greater resource. The field of intergroup relations is a relatively new one and it is from the private agency that this field has been developed and these skills have been learned; more often than not by trial and error.

The public agency which has a program with which it is less than satisfied, or the public agency which is developing a new program, would be in error not to determine the private skills available for consultation and to utilize those skills to the fullest possible extent. So, too, within this public-private relationship, review and critique of public agencies and programs from the private intergroup relations sector should be not only tolerated but welcomed. We have seen a number of instances when public programs have been greatly strengthened by this process.

Frequently, over a period of years, the private agencies have developed programs and experience in "pioneer" areas which are later adopted by public agencies. Pre-school training and minority entrepreneurship represent examples, and the range, of these private agency explorations. As existing public programs are examined and new ones are developed, every effort should be made to assess the experiences and results of these private explorations.

Finally, private agencies can, in many instances, play a unique role in determining the nature and extent of our social and economic problems and of informing the public of the need to respond with urgency to these ills. No public program, no matter how soundly conceived, will, over the long run, be adequately funded or have an opportunity for success if the general public does not understand the need for such a program. Public agencies should give high priority to forming partnerships with private agencies toward the end of determining the nature and extent of problems, and their solutions. And, within this partnership, private agencies should give the highest priority to informing the public of the particulars of our current national crisis.

Dear Mr. Anthony,

Although you may have more suggestions than you need for the National NAIRO Conference to be held in Rochester in November, one occurs to me that I will send along anyway. You are undoubtedly familiar with the writings of the psychiatrist Dr. Robert Coles. He is one of the contributing editors of The New Republic, has written several books and is a person who has been aware for some time of the kind of polarization to be expected as efforts were made for black people.

Dr. Coles might be very useful to intergroup relations people in exploring ways to reach those members of our community who feel as disadvantaged and forgotten as the blacks - whom we really need if we are to accomplish the tremendous task facing us. Dr. Coles has worked in cities in both the north and the south - in black communities and white- he would be an excellent resource person.

Sincerely,

Dear Another Mother,

On March 4, 1969 at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Dr. George Wald, professor of biology at Harvard and Nobel Prize winner, spoke to a group of scientists and students assembled to discuss the uses of scientific knowledge. Two Boston Globe staffers covered the M.I.T. meeting, returned to the office independently of one another and told an editor, "I think I've just listened to the most important speech of my lifetime." We agree.

At this moment the Anti-Ballistic Missile debate is taking place in Washington and the vote is about to be taken. The outcome depends on you.

It is urgent that you write TODAY to both your Senators. Refer to your Senator's position on ABM (phone your local newspaper for this information) if you want to make your letter even more effective. In any case, urge both Senators to vote against the deployment of the ABM. And get at least one friend to do the same.

The Senate—100 men—hold the fate of our children in their hands. You are a voter. Your influence counts. Use it!!

Donna Reed Owen, Co-Chairman

A GENERATION IN SEARCH OF A FUTURE

by Dr. George Wald

"All of you know that in the last couple of years there has been student unrest, breaking at times into violence, in many parts of the world: in England, Germany, Italy, Spain, Mexico, Japan, and, needless to say, many parts of this country. There has been a great deal of discussion as to what it all means. Perfectly clearly, it means something different in Mexico from what it does in France, and something different in France from what it does in Tokyo, and something different in Tokyo from what it does in this country. Yet, unless we are to assume that students have gone crazy all over the world, or that they have just decided that it's the thing to do, it must have some common meaning.

"I don't need to go so far afield to look for that meaning. I am a teacher, and at Harvard I have a class of about three hundred and fifty students—men and women—most of them freshmen and sophomores. Over these past few years, I have felt increasingly that something is terribly wrong—and this year ever so much more than last. Something has gone sour, in teaching and in learning. It's almost as though there were a widespread feeling that education has become irrelevant.

"A lecture is much more of a dialogue than many of you probably realize. As you lecture, you keep watching the faces, and information keeps coming back to you all the time. I began to feel, particularly this year, that I was missing much of what was coming back. I tried asking the students, but they didn't or couldn't help me very much.

"But I think I know what's the matter. I think that this whole generation of students is beset with a profound uneasiness, and I don't think that they have yet quite defined its source. I think I understand the reasons for their uneasiness even better than they do. What is more, I share their uneasiness.

"What's bothering those students? Some of them tell you it's the Vietnam war. I think the Vietnam war is the most shameful episode in the whole of American history. The concept of war crimes is an American invention. We've committed many war crimes in Vietnam—but I'll tell you something interesting about that. We were committing war crimes in World War II, before the Nuremberg trials were held and the principle of war crimes was stated. The saturation bombing of German cities was a war crime. Dropping those atomic bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki was a war crime. If we had lost the war, it might have been our leaders who had to answer for such actions. I've gone through all that history lately, and I find that there's a gimmick in it. It isn't written out, but I think we established it by precedent. That gimmick is that if one can allege that one is repelling or retaliating for an aggression, after that everything goes.

"And, you see, we are living in a world in which all wars are wars of defense. All War Departments are now Defense Departments. This is all part of the doubletalk of our time. The aggressor is always on the other side. I suppose this is why our ex-Secretary of State Dean Rusk went to such pains to insist, as he still insists, that in Vietnam we are repelling an aggression. And if that's what we are doing—so runs the doctrine—everything goes. If the concept of war crimes is ever to mean anything, they will have to be defined as categories of acts, regardless of alleged provocation. But that isn't so now.

"I think we've lost that war, as a lot of other people think, too. The Vietnamese have a secret weapon. It's their willingness to die beyond our willingness to kill. In effect, they've been saying, You can kill us, but you'll have to kill a lot of us; you may have to kill all of us. And, thank heaven, we are not yet ready to do that.

"Yet we have come a long way toward it—far enough to sicken many Americans, far enough to sicken even our fighting men. Far enough so that our national symbols have gone sour. How many of you can sing about 'the rockets' red glare, the bombs bursting in air' without thinking, Those are our bombs and our rockets, bursting over South Vietnamese villages? When those words were written, we were a people struggling for freedom against oppression. Now we are supporting open or thinly disguised military dictatorships all over the world, helping them to control and repress peoples struggling for their freedom.

"But that Vietnam war, shameful and terrible as it is, seems to me only an immediate incident in a much larger and more stubborn situation.

"Part of my trouble with students is that almost all the students I teach were born after World War II. Just after World War II, a series of new and abnormal procedures came into American life. We regarded them at the time as temporary aberrations. We thought we would get back to normal American life someday.

"But those procedures have stayed with us now for more than twenty years, and those students of mine have never known anything else. They think those things are normal. They think that we've always had a Pentagon, that we have always had a big Army, and that we have always had a draft. But those are all new things in American life, and I think that they are incompatible with what America meant before.

"How many of you realize that just before World War II the entire American Army, including the Air Corps, numbered a hundred and thirty-nine thousand men? Then World War II started, but we weren't yet in it, and, seeing that there was great trouble in the world, we doubled this Army to two hundred and sixty-eight thousand men. Then, in World War II, it got to be eight million. And then World War II came to an end and we prepared to go back to a peacetime Army, somewhat as the American Army had always been before. And, indeed, in 1950—you think about 1950, our international commitments, the Cold War, the Truman Doctrine, and all the rest of it—in 1950, we got down to six hundred thousand men.

"Now we have three and a half million men under arms: about six hundred thousand in Vietnam, about three hundred thousand more in 'support areas' elsewhere in the Pacific, about two hundred and fifty thousand in Germany. And there are a lot at home. Some months ago, we were told that three hundred thousand National Guardsmen and two hundred thousand reservists—so half a million men—had been specially trained for riot duty in the cities.

"I say the Vietnam war is just an immediate incident because as long as we keep that big an Army, it will always find things to do. If the Vietnam war stopped tomorrow, the chances are that with that big a military establishment we would be in another such adventure, abroad or at home, before you knew it.

"The thing to do about the draft is not to reform it but to get rid of it.

"A peacetime draft is the most un-American thing I know. All the time I was growing up, I was told about oppressive Central European countries and Russia, where young men were forced into the Army, and I was told what they did about it. They chopped off a finger, or shot off a couple of toes, or, better still, if they could manage it, they came to this country. And we understood that, and sympathized, and were glad to welcome them.

"Now, by present estimates, from four to six thousand Americans of draft age have left this country for Canada, two or three thousand more have gone to Europe, and it looks as though many more were preparing to emigrate.

"A bill to stop the draft was recently introduced in the Senate (S. 503), sponsored by a group of senators that runs the gamut from McGovern and Hatfield to Barry Goldwater. I hope it goes through. But I think that when we get rid of the draft we must also drastically cut back the size of the armed forces.

"Yet there is something ever so much bigger and more important than the draft. That bigger thing, of course, is the militarization of our country. Ex-President Eisenhower, in his farewell address, warned us of what he called the military-industrial complex. I am sad to say that we must begin to think of it now as the military-industrial-labor-union complex. What happened under the plea of the Cold War was not alone that we built up the first big peacetime Army in our history but that we institutionalized it. We built, I suppose, the biggest government building in our history to run it, and we institutionalized it.

"I don't think we can live with the present military establishment, and its eighty-billion-dollar-a-year budget, and keep America anything like the America we have known in the past. It is corrupting the life of the whole country. It is buying up everything in sight: industries, banks, investors, scientists—and lately it seems also to have bought up the labor unions.

"The Defense Department is always broke, but some of the things it does with that eighty billion dollars a year would make Buck Rogers envious. For example, the Rocky Mountain Arsenal, on the outskirts of Denver, was manufacturing a deadly nerve poison on such a scale that there was a problem of waste disposal. Nothing daunted, the people there dug a tunnel two miles deep under Denver, into which they have injected so much poisoned water that, beginning a couple of years ago, Denver has experienced a series of earth tremors of increasing severity. Now there is grave fear of a major earthquake. An interesting debate is in progress as to whether Denver will be safer if that lake of poisoned water is removed or is left in place.

"Perhaps you have read also of those six thousand sheep that suddenly died in Skull Valley, Utah, killed by another nerve poison—a strange and, I believe, still unexplained accident, since the nearest testing seems to have been thirty miles away.

"As for Vietnam, the expenditure of firepower there has been frightening. Some of you may still remember Khe Sanh, a hamlet just south of the Demilitarized Zone, where a force of United States Marines was beleaguered for a time. During that period, we dropped on the perimeter of Khe Sanh more explosives than fell on Japan throughout World War II, and more than fell on the whole of Europe during the years 1942 and 1943.

"One of the officers there was quoted as having said afterward, 'It looks like the world caught smallpox and died.'

"The only point of government is to safeguard and foster life. Our government has become preoccupied with death, with the business of killing and being killed. So-called defense now absorbs sixty per cent of the national budget, and about twelve per cent of the Gross National Product.

"A lively debate is beginning again on whether or not we should deploy antiballistic missiles, the ABM. I don't have to talk about them—everyone else here is doing that. But I should like to mention a curious circumstance. In September, 1967, or about a year and a half ago, we had a meeting of M.I.T. and Harvard people, including experts on these matters, to talk about whether anything could be done to block the Sentinel system—the deployment of ABMs. Everyone present thought them undesirable, but a few of the most knowledgeable persons took what seemed to be the practical view: 'Why fight about a dead issue? It has been decided, the funds have been appropriated. Let's go on from there.'

"Well, fortunately, it's not a dead issue.

"An ABM is a nuclear weapon. It takes a nuclear weapon to stop a nuclear weapon. And our concern must be with the whole issue of nuclear weapons.

"There is an entire semantics ready to deal with the sort of thing I am about to say. It involves such phrases as 'Those are the facts of life.' No—these are the facts of death. I don't accept them, and I advise you not to accept them. We are under repeated pressure to accept things that are presented to us as settled—decisions that have been made. Always there is the thought: Let's go on from there. But this time we don't see how to go on. We will have to stick with these issues.

"We are told that the United States and Russia, between them, by now have stockpiled nuclear weapons of approximately the explosive power of fifteen tons of TNT for every man, woman, and child on earth. And now it is suggested that we must make more. All very regrettable, of course, but 'those are the facts of life.' We really would like to disarm, but our new Secretary of Defense has made the ingenious proposal that now is the time to greatly increase our nuclear armaments, so that we can disarm from a position of strength.

"I think all of you know there is no adequate defense against massive nuclear attack. It is both easier and cheaper to circumvent any known nuclear-defense system than to provide it. It's all pretty crazy. At the very moment we talk of deploying ABMs, we are also building the MIRV, the weapon to circumvent ABMs.

"As far as I know, the most conservative estimates of the number of Americans who would be killed in a major nuclear attack, with everything working as well as can be hoped and all foreseeable precautions taken, run to about fifty million. We have become callous to gruesome statistics, and this seems at first to be only another gruesome statistic. You think, Bang!—and next morning, if you're still there, you read in the newspapers that fifty million people were killed.

"But that isn't the way it happens. When we killed close to two hundred thousand people with those first, little, old-fashioned uranium bombs that we dropped on Hiroshima and Nagasaki, about the same number of persons were maimed, blinded, burned, poisoned, and otherwise doomed. A lot of them took a long time to die.

"That's the way it would be. Not a bang and a certain number of corpses to bury but a nation filled with millions of helpless, maimed, tortured, and doomed persons, and the survivors huddled with their families in shelters, with guns ready to fight off their neighbors trying to get some uncontaminated food and water.

"A few months ago, Senator Richard Russell, of Georgia, ended a speech in the Senate with the words 'If we have to start over again with another Adam and Eve, I want them to be Americans; and I want them on this continent and not in Europe.' That was a United States senator making a patriotic speech. Well, here is a Nobel laureate who thinks that those words are criminally insane.

"How real is the threat of full-scale nuclear war? I have my own very inexpert idea, but, realizing how little I know, and fearful that I may be a little paranoid on this subject, I take every opportunity to ask reputed experts. I asked that question of a distinguished professor of government at Harvard about a month ago. I asked him what sort of odds he would lay on the possibility of full-scale nuclear war within the foreseeable future. 'Oh,' he said comfortably, 'I think I can give you a pretty good answer to that question. I estimate the probability of full-scale nuclear war, provided that the situation remains about as it is now, at two per cent per year.' Anybody can do the simple calculation that shows that two per cent per year means that the chance of having that full-scale nuclear war by 1990 is about one in three, and by 2000 it is about fifty-fifty.

"I think I know what is bothering the students. I think that what we are up against is a generation that is by no means sure that it has a future.

"I am growing old, and my future, so to speak, is already behind me. But there are those students of mine, who are in my mind always; and there are my children, the youngest of them now seven and nine, whose future is infinitely more precious to me than my own. So it isn't just their generation; it's mine, too. We're all in it together.

"Are we to have a chance to live? We don't ask for prosperity, or security. Only for a reasonable chance to live, to work out our destiny in peace and decency. Not to go down in history as the apocalyptic generation.

"And it isn't only nuclear war. Another overwhelming threat is in the population explosion. That has not yet even begun to come under control. There is every indication that the world population will double before the year 2000, and there is a widespread expectation of famine on an unprecedented scale in many parts of the world. The experts tend to differ only in their estimates of when those famines will begin. Some think by 1980; others think they can be staved off until 1990; very few expect that they will not occur by the year 2000.

"That is the problem. Unless we can be surer than we now are that this generation has a future, nothing else matters. It's not good enough to give it tender, loving care, to supply it with breakfast foods, to buy it expensive educations. Those things don't mean anything unless this generation has a future. And we're not sure that it does

"I don't think that there are problems of youth, or student problems. All the real problems I know about are grown-up problems.

"Perhaps you will think me altogether absurd, or 'academic,' or hopelessly innocent—that is, until you think of the alternatives—if I say, as I do to you now: We have to get rid of those nuclear weapons. There is nothing worth having that can be obtained by nuclear war—nothing material or ideological—no tradition that it can defend. It is utterly self-defeating. Those atomic bombs represent an unusable weapon. The only use for an atomic bomb is to keep somebody else from using one. It can give us no protection—only the doubtful satisfaction of retaliation. Nuclear weapons offer us nothing but a balance of terror, and a balance of terror is still terror.

"We have to get rid of those atomic weapons, here and everywhere. We cannot live with them.

"I think we've reached a point of great decision, not just for our nation, not only for all humanity, but for life upon the earth. I tell my students, with a feeling of pride that I hope they will share, that the carbon, nitrogen, and oxygen that make up ninety-nine per cent of our living substance were cooked in the deep interiors of earlier generations of dying stars. Gathered up from the ends of the universe, over billions of years, eventually they came to form, in part, the substance of our sun, its planets, and ourselves. Three billion years ago, life arose upon the earth. It is the only life in the solar system.

"About two million years ago, man appeared. He has become the dominant species on the earth. All other living things, animal and plant, live by his sufferance. He is the custodian of life on earth, and in the solar system. It's a big responsibility.

"The thought that we're in competition with Russians or with Chinese is all a mistake, and trivial. We are one species, with a world to win. There's life all over this universe, but the only life in the solar system is on earth, and in the whole universe we are the only men.

"Our business is with life, not death. Our challenge is to give what account we can of what becomes of life in the solar system, this corner of the universe that is our home; and, most of all, what becomes of men—all men, of all nations, colors, and creeds. This has become one world, a world for all men. It is only such a world that can now offer us life, and the chance to go on."

The Honorable George McGovern
Senate Office Building
Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator McGovern:

This is written to you in my capacity as program chairman for the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials for their annual conference this year at the Flagship-Rochester Hotel in Rochester, New York on November 18-21.

NAIRO, the professional association, includes some 1,300 persons in its membership who are working full time in the field of civil rights and civil liberties. Our national office is in Washington and there are a number of our key members in the Washington area who know and respect your leadership and could tell more about the NAIRO itself.

We would like very much for you to be the closing and primary speaker at a luncheon session on Friday, November 21st, but if this time in our agenda were inconvenient, we would have to arrange our calendar to suit you if you are able to honor us with your presence. Our national director, Mr. Frederick B. Routh, would be happy to discuss our need with you further, or at your discretion. Mr. Routh can be reached at 2027 Massachusetts Avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C. Telephone: 387-7050. I would welcome a call from someone on your staff as to what we project.

Thank you for your consideration, and best wishes.

Sincerely yours,

Paul Anthony

Dear Jack:

John Morris has shared with me your suggestions relative to the NAIRO meeting. It seems to me that the items you raise all fall under business rather than program areas. We have scheduled for the meeting the full afternoon, Thursday, and the full morning, Friday, for business sessions and leave it up to Fred and the NAIRO officers to put items on the agenda for those times. Since, however, you pretty well cover on-going business, you might share these suggestions with Fred.

Incidentally, relative to the Committee on Policy Procedures, which I share, I sent in our final report some months ago, immediately after our St. Louis meeting on the assumption that this report would be sent promptly to all members. If you write Fred you might bring this up, too.

If not before, I hope to see you in Rochester. I will be in the third armed car parked just outside the hotel.

Sincerely,

Mr. John Morris

Dear John:

This is written in response to your memorandum of June 4th. My delay in responding is due to a job change.

While I agree with your general outline calling for the areas of political and economic developments to be spotlighted during the conference, I think we must build in to the conference a proper response to this past year of critical self examination of NAIRO. Therefore, in addition to the regular program format, I am recommending additional time for organizational matters.

There are three basic groups that should have conference time set aside for proper response and regurgitation. First, the National Commission of NAIRO, headed by Bill White of Washington, D.C. has held a series of hearings across the country examining the changing intergroup field, the changing role of the worker and how NAIRO can be of greater service to its members in the field. Secondly, there is, somewhere within NAIRO, a Committee on Policy Procedures that has been examining the decision making processes on policy matters within NAIRO. This Committee is chaired by S.R.C.'s Paul Anthony. Thirdly, there ~~was an 18 member Regional Committee set up to~~ look at all of NAIRO's paper sub-committees, departments, commissions, etc. Unfortunately, the 18 member Regional Committee has not yet gotten off the ground so I don't know what we can expect of them.

OFFICE OF URBAN AFFAIRS OF THE ARCHDIOCESE OF HARTFORD

I am a member of this Committee and have been somewhat dissappointed in the lack of interest. The NAIRO Office in Washington has done all that it possibly can do to help this Committee get started. Even though this Committee has not been a fully functioning Committee, time must be set aside in Rochester to examine the myriad of special Departments, commissions, etc. that exist only on paper.

Next, fourthly, I would suggest that at some time during the conference, we hear from the work of the NAIRO Committee on Corporate Support and Task Force II, the group that was set up to approach President Nixon.

Finally, I would like to re-emphasize my concern for plenty of time for organizational matters. I would like to think that the small group activities that you mentioned in your memo of June 4th will be designed to address some of these organizational concerns.

With all best regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

Jack

Dear Sophie:

I assume that Fred has shared with you the schedule for the meeting and the room requirements, although that is not reflected in his letter to you of June 30th. If not, let me know and I will give you the number and final plans in terms of space needs.

Letters of invitation to some speakers and other participants have gone out, though most have not yet answered and there are others yet to be invited. My biggest hang-up is my ignorance of good people outside the South, and while I have had a number of helpful suggestions for program, I have had very few suggestions of individuals.

It is very good to know about the free printing. What is the latest date we will have to have the material for the printer?

Warmest regards.

Dear Paul,

Greetings from the Capital City on the Potomac -- for the last time til I return from Europe; I'll send cards !

Enclosed is some correspondence between Sophie Divers and me. Please look it over with some care. Also, please call her if you have any corrections or comments that might be helpful to her. The Levin (no kin to Art) Printing Company will need to have a finished copy of the program, well before the Annual Conference. I do hope that you are planning to come to the September Board Meeting; I believe it quite essential that you be there. It might be helpful if John Morris could also come, but I leave that to you.

During the coverage of the Moon Walk and Appolo 11 shots, NBC kept interviewing a guy from the Atlanta area: Dr. Paul Knappenberger of the Fernbank Science Center (DeKalb County); if you have never met this chap, I suggest it would be well worth while -- seems to be really with it.

The forthcoming trip's itineary is: Dublin, Paris, Vienna, Rome, Genoa and back on the Italian Lines' Michelangelo. Should be great. We leave Friday, August 1st and will be back in the office on Monday, August 25th. I intend to have a ball.

Warm regards to PT and all my friends at the SR & C.

as ever,

Fred

Dear Sophie:

This letter is in the nature of a follow-up to our various phone conversations of yesterday. First, let me say how good it was to learn that you are feeling so much better and have abandoned your cane - CONGRATULATIONS ! Now, let me turn to your letter of the 22nd and paragraph by paragraph put down what we discussed on the phone -- I'll send a copy to Paul Anthony so that he may be kept abreast of our deliberations and decisions. As you know, I called him after our first phone call to ascertain his thinking on schedules.

Paragraph 1. I am glad that you have sent out letters to area businesses and industries asking for their financial support; you should do the same with area labor unions -- and also human rights agencies. It's good to know that the Levin Printing Company will print the programs. When the time comes -- or perhaps at the September Board meeting -- you can introduce Paul Anthony to Mr. Levin.

Paragraph 2. Thanks for involving Ken Storandt in all this; as NY State Chapter Chairman, he should be. As I said, I would drop a note to all NY State Members asking them to support you and Ken in preparing for the National Annual Conference. I agree, that those who have been faithful members over a period of time should be given the more important assignments.

Paragraph 3. Thanks for making arrangements for the national Board Meeting, September 19-20; in the announcement (shortly to go out) we will ask that reservations be made on or before September 4th. It is good of the NY State Chapter to entertain the Board on Friday evening the 19th. My thanks to them. As to news coverage of the Board Meeting -- I believe it would be much better to hold a news conference at the close of the meeting, rather than have reporters present during the meeting. I'll ask Lloyd Davis to call you on this and also on the question of when he wants the Westinghouse Executive (Frank Cotter) to meet with local industrialists and business types -- also labor.

Paragraph 4 (page 2) I suggest that we have six volunteers for registration from 9:00 a.m. to 8:30 p.m. on Tuesday, November 18th; six volunteers from 9:00 a.m. to 12:30 noon on the 19th and cut back to 4 that afternoon from 12:30 til 4:30; two volunteers from 9:00 a.m. til 8:30 p.m. on Thursday the 20th. This means that the number suggested will actually be on duty -- back-up volunteers will probably be needed. None are needed for the Board Meeting in September. Fine on airline schedules !!

Paragraph 5. Penny & I thank you for your good wishes and return the same several fold -- our very best ! Warm regards, good friend.

as ever,

Fitz

Dear Fred:

I feel very pleased about our progress toward hosting the National Conference in November. Letters have been sent out to industries and businesses in this area asking their support. Today I received my first reply. Programs will be printed by The Levin Printing Company, 31 Riverview Place, Rochester, New York 14608. I do not know what the equivalent of this in cash would be, (I was ashamed to ask), but this will, in some measure, reduce the $3,000 I am trying to raise prior to September 1st. I believe all those who give specifically should be carried on a sponsor's page in the program.

I have attempted to involve Ken in this as much as possible. I have kept him abreast of my actions and the results. I do not object to a membership drive at this time, and will participate in one, but feel very strongly that the most important assignments should be given to those old members who have stuck with the Chapter since its founding.

Arrangements are completed for the September 19-20 National Board Meeting. The Rochester members of the State Chapter will entertain the Board on Friday night, September 19th at the Hotel Flagship*Rochester. I have talked with Paul Miller, President of the Associated Press and he assures me that we will have AP coverage for this meeting. Lloyd Davis had mentioned his desire to have an executive of Westinghouse meet with industrial executives here. I do not remember whether Lloyd wanted this arranged for the National Board Meeting or the National Conference. Would you please have this clarified for me? Do not forget that the Hotel would like all reservations for the Board meeting on or before September 4, 1969.

Pass on to Al Levin

Enclosed you will find a copy of a letter I received from the Rochester and Monroe County Convention and Publicity Bureau, Inc. relative to the Board Meeting. Please advise me immediately as to what I will need. On September 1st I will receive from another local press, 55 copies of airlines schedules in and from Rochester. I will send those to be distributed with the call for the Board of Directors Meeting. We will purchase 2,000 to be distributed at the National Conference. They are published monthly, so it will be the later part of October before I will receive them and forward them to you.

Best wishes to you and to Penny. Please let me hear from you at your earliest convenience. I need encourgement, man!

Dear Mrs. Divers:

The Convention Bureau will be pleased to provide you with trained registration girls, badges, bulletin typewriters and literature for your Registration Desk at the Flagship-Rochester Hotel.

This is part of the Convention Bureau's service program to assist you in every possible manner toward having an outstanding meeting in "remarkable, new Rochester."

Most of the members of the part-time service staff must know the work assignments two or three weeks in advance to enable them to secure baby sitters, if necessary, or arrange for transportation to and from downtown.

Hence, it is important that you let us know not later than September 1, 1969 of the number of girls you will need as well as the dates and hours that you will hold registration.

Unless we hear from you by September 1, 1969 we will assume that you do not require the services of the Convention Bureau.

Cordially yours,

Regrettably, I have a very important Executive Committee meeting on September 19 and 20. However, I do plan to be in Washington before that time and will discuss, at length, any information I have with Fred and Lloyd. After that discussion, I don't believe it would matter whether or not I met with the printer so long as he could have the information needed.

Best.

Dear Paul:

Thank you for your letter. I very badly need the schedule for the meeting and room requirements. The Hotel asked for this information on last Wednesday. Please send it at your earliest possible convenience.

Al Levin, the printer, has been asked to meet with you, Lloyd and Fred on September 19th or 20th. Would you inform me of the date and time you want the meeting so that I may inform Mr. Levin.

Attached you will find a copy of a page of the New York State Chapter Meeting Minutes of June 20-21 and a copy of a letter to you dated June 12, 1969, where some suggestions for individual speakers were requested. I hope this is of some help to you. Best wishes and let me hear from you soon.

Dear Paul:

It was good to see you again at the NAIRO Board Meeting in St. Louis.

I have given considerable thought to the overall plans for the NAIRO Conference of 1969 which will be held here in Rochester, November 17-21 at the Hotel Flagship-Rochester. I believe that Rochester is the smallest City in which we ever held a national conference. I believe that for this reason alone, we need to put on the best program possible to draw the largest percentage of NAIRO membership.

It also seems to me that intergroup relations is one of the most important things in the Nation today. An organization of some 1800 professional intergroup relations workers and policy-makers has some status with top people interested and concerned in the field. Frankly, it does seem to me that the President of the United States, or someone who can speak for him - usually, the Vice-President or a Cabinet member - could be invited to address one session. Whatever national says has top priority in this field must be carried out and "watch-dogged" by the professionals. It would be good too, for us to see how the top office in our Nation views the progress and problems facing the Nation in this field.

Educational institutions throughout the Nation have experienced flare-ups of all kinds in the past year. Many are accused of being racial in nature. Many intergroup relations officials, during moments of stress, have been called in to sit with institution administration and students. I, for one, would certainly like more information, understanding and guidance from NAIRO in these matters. Is it possible that we could obtain a speaker such as Dr. Perkins, President of Cornell University or Dr. W. Allan Wallis, President of the University of Rochester? or what about Dr. S. I. Hayakawa, of San Francisco State College (if we can raise enough money here to pay for it)?

What progress is industry making in its efforts to train the unskilled to fulfill the needs of today, technologically, that would provide jobs with a livable wage. A number of the largest industries in the Country are headquartered here in Rochester. Could we consider Dr. William S. Vaughn, President of the Eastman Kodak Corporation or Joseph Wilson, Chairman of the Board of Xerox, Inc.?

I think we need some "cons" as well as "pros". I am thinking particularly of Ron Katanga, head of the radical US organization headquartered in California, or the Students for a Democratic Society, or Elisha Muhammed, spiritual leader of the Muslims, whose headquarters is in Chicago? My feeling here is-if I must deal with followers or believers of such people, and I have to, then I must know some of their thinking and ways of rationalizing. Neither can we overlook your neighbor down there, whose name I have forgotten, but I believe he heads the Klu Klux Klan of America. Surely exposure to 20 minutes of these people will be a learning experience, first hand, for any intergroup relations official and will better able us to deal with their elements. By the way, what road are the Black Panthers following since Eldridge Cleaver "went away". As I understand it, they are active everywhere - most certainly here!

I look forward to seeing you again at the September 19-20 Board of Directors Meeting in Rochester.

Very truly yours,

Sophie

It was noted that the Chapter Chairman be requested to communicate with the National Program Chairman, with a copy to Frederick B. Routh, Executive Director, NAIRO, 2027 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036, informing of Chapter suggestions for National Conference program. The Chapter felt that a strong program would be necessary and that emphasis should be put on youth since this is top priority for Intergroup Relations officials today on a National basis. Suggested speakers are:

1. The President of the United States or the Vice-President, or a top level Cabinet member, or Senator Ted Kennedy on current problems and programs of Intergroup Relations as viewed by the Government administration.

2. A college President of a confrontation school, such as Hayakawa of San Francisco State or Dr. Dexter Perkins of Cornell University.

3. A Black student leader from a confrontation school such as Tom Jones of Cornell University.

4. The National president or a top ranking National officer of Students for a Democratic Society.

5. A National representative of the Black Panther Party, such as Mrs. Eldredge Cleaver.

6. Green and Cobb, authors of Black Rage.

7. A Dr. Wald, NNobel Prize winner on the Harvard Faculty to speak on youth.

8. Ross Flannigan, Secretary, Quaker Project on Community Conflict (NYC) as workshop leader following speech on campus conflict. (See Congressional Record 6/26/68).

III. FURTHER DISCUSSION

It was voted that the New York State Chapter, when host to National, would recognize only those members in good standing with National and the State Chapter.

It was decided that the Chapter cocktail-hospitality hour would be Monday, November 17, 1969, the first evening of the National Conference. The consensus was that the Chapter not attempt to supply unlimited free drinks. That each registered delegate should be provided a ticket for one or two free drinks (depending on Chapter finances and number of delegates) and that a cash bar would be set up for additional drinks.

We will send you more information shortly.

Dear Paul:

Thank you for the conference physical arrangements schedule.

I have one question. On Thursday morning, November 20, you have a buffet luncheon scheduled from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.. Honestly Paul, you must be kidding! Please let me know by return mail what you intended for this time.

Also, the New York State Chapter will host a continental breakfast for all delegates and visitors. Will you please give us a morning and the hour.

Please include Mayor Frank T. Lamb of Rochester at your head table for the banquet of Tuesday night, November 18. Should we also invite U.S. Congressman Frank Horton?

Yours very truly,

It is welcomed news that you can make a tentative commitment to be the speaker at the luncheon of the NAIRO Annual Conference in Rochester, November 21st.

We understand, of course, that your responsibilities may make it impossible for you to attend. We also will understand if a last minute cancellation becomes necessary.

Later I will forward to you more information about the meeting. In the meantime, please know that we are very grateful for your interest.

Dear Mr. Anthony:

Many thanks for your kind letter of July thirtieth, inviting me to address the luncheon session of the National Association of Intergroup Relations officials in Rochester, New York, on Friday, November 21.

I would like very much to be with you. It is difficult, as you can understand, to foresee just what the legislative situation may be in the Senate at that time, but perhaps I can give you a tentative commitment to speak at the luncheon and then confirm it later on in the fall.

I do hope that plans for your conference will go well, and I appreciate your interest in having me with you.

Dear Lloyd:

At the August meeting of the Philadelphia Chapter of NAIRO, Jim Sanders gave us a report of the activities of the "Committee of Eighteen" which was mandated by and elected at the 1968 NAIRO Conference in Philadelphia.

The Denver fiasco (on the 6th month anniversary of the NAIRO Conference), the limited attendance in St. Louis (with somewhat short notice) and the abortive Washington meeting were of some concern to us. As you know, the NAIRO chapter here is concerned enough about the "Committee of Eighteen" to have voted full support, financially, to one of the representatives from this district (Jim Sanders) to the original meeting in Denver. We continue that concern and were disturbed to learn, as we did from Jim's report, that the "Committee of Eighteen" had been disbanded by the National President without Board action, to our knowledge.

The "Committee of Eighteen" was mandated by the national body meeting in conference. It would seem, as discussed at the November 15, 1968 board meeting by the Chairman of the Philadelphia chapter, the mandate placed upon the national board and office a responsibility to help, without interference, the function of this committee. The Board and the National Committee have chosen not to do this. We believe the rationalization phrase was, "We leaned over backwards not to interfere." The Philadelphia chapter finds this attitude hard to understand and the action of the President in disbanding the committee without basis in the by-laws.

We, therefore, challenge National NAIRO to exert a previously unexpended effort and to act responsibly in view of the mandate issued by those attending the 1968 Conference to bring together the "Committee of Eighteen" in some meaningful fashion with the appropriate extent of effort and finances necessary to accomplish this.

Recognizing that time is of the essence and a series of meetings will be involved, we suggest that regional meetings might start the process. Certainly the "concerns" of the three members of that committee who met in St. Louis should be included in an initial mailing.

We in Philadelphia are most anxious that this process begin in order that a responsible and useful deliberation may be continued as a part of the 1969 Conference in Rochester. May we expect a reply to this communication within the next ten days, indicating a meeting call has been issued.

Sincerely,

LG

Dear Lloyd:

Following my telephone conversation with you this morning and one with Fred, I am very interested to learn that the Board has rejected those plans developed by me for the November NAIRO meeting. I am somewhat surprised at this action in light of the fact that I did not make any effort to implement these plans until they were discussed and approved by the Board in St. Louis. My main concern, however, is the embarrassing position in which this action places me in having to rescind invitations to persons whom I have asked to participate in the NAIRO meeting.

It would, of course, be superfluous to tender my resignation as Chairman of the Program Committee, since the Board, in exercising its authority, has chosen to take over those responsibilities.

However, so that there will be no misunderstanding, I do want this written record of my recognition of the Board's authority and the fact that by virtue of that authority I have no responsibility relative to your meeting in November.

I do hope you have a successful meeting.

Dear Paul,

Thanks very much for your letter of September 25, 1969. I do share your concern and disappointment. I am sorry that you had to leave the Board Meeting on Friday and that the subject matter of program content for the conference was reopened on Saturday morning. I recall writing you shortly afterwards about the need for restructuring your program relative to this year being one of "critical self-examination of the field, worker and NAIRO". I also thought that Fred had made a special trip South to discuss this matter with you and that you had at least made one visit to Washington to meet with Fred on conference program content. I simply cannot understand why the apparent "lack of communication" which resulted in your being placed in a most difficult and embarrasing situation. If there is anything which I can do to make "amends" just say the word. You undertook this assignment at great sacrifice and I shall ever be grateful for your generous help and assistance and willingness to make my administration meaningful. I am very sorry for this unfortunate "mix-up".

We all ask your forgiveness. Please don't write NAIRO off. I do hope this conference in some small measure will get us back on the right track.

Dear Lloyd:

Please accept this letter as my official resignation from NAIRO.

As you know I have been terribly concerned about NAIRO policies and its direction over the last couple of years. It seems to me that today NAIRO is ignoring the primary reasons for which it was founded. Instead of moving forward, it continues looking within itself and trying to define itself. NAIRO is no longer an infant organization and should be both more functional and better organized. Events of the past year have indicated such is not the case.

During this past year especially I have attempted to fight some of those policies and procedures which I did not approve of--to no avail.

Upon my return to work from maternity leave I read very closely all of the NAIRO correspondence which I received in the past few months. The apparent shoddy way in which Paul Anthony's plans for the Rochester conference were handled dismayed me. The Executive Board's actions in handling the resolutions of the 1968 conference seem hypocritical and ambiguous.

I do not have the time to become more deeply involved in NAIRO than I am now to fight these things I disapprove of, and I cannot live with them as a member. Therefore, I feel I must resign.

I do commend you and Fred on your attempts to provide opportunities for the Committee of Eighteen to convene. It seems to me the reason it has not met yet is because no one who is a member of the committee will take the initiative to direct it--myself included. In the absence of a chairman the committee has stayed disorganized and unclear since its inception--through no fault of yours.

I wish the best for NAIRO. I started my career through its intern program and remain grateful for that experience and opportunity. I have enjoyed being a member. I regret the circumstances which force me to resign.

Yours sincerely,

Mr. Lloyd Davis
NAIRO President
4616 Drummond Avenue
Chevy Chase, Maryland 20015

Dear Lloyd:

"To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under heaven." I believe that the time has come when I must accept another position. I now have under consideration three posts, one of which I shall accept. Though I must make the decision without undue delay, each organization has indicated that I may wait until the first of the year to report for duty. I requested this so that I might have time to wind-up my responsibilities with NAIRO and give the Association ample time to choose a successor. This, then, is my letter of resignation as NAIRO's Executive Director, effective December thirty-first.

NAIRO is at an important cross-road in its history and I feel that new staff leadership -- under the supervision of the Officers and Board -- may provide new directions for the Association. I believe that NAIRO leadership, during this period of transition, must guard against letting the organization bend to every wind that blows; there is need for a sturdy and steady hand at the helm if NAIRO is not to blow apart or away. I am confident that Ed Howden and Al Cowles will provide that type of leadership during the next two years. I earnestly urge the Board and members to follow the leadership of these two good men.

NAIRO must remain a house of many rooms. It must have room for many opinions -- and under its shelter there should be respect and affection among those who hold differing opinions. We may not be able to re-establish that "warm and misty feeling" of which Harold Fleming once spoke but at least there should be a decent sense of professional fraternalism. As Jefferson said in his First Inaugural "Let us restore that harmony and affection without which liberty and even life itself are dreary things."

While we should always evaluate the effectiveness of our programs, I believe that the time for introspection is now past. We have spent a year at critical self-examination; the time has come for action. Out of this year's Annual Conference should come the guidelines for that action.

NAIRO's most pressing problems are financial; I can offer no parting wisdom as to their solution. In this period of financial crisis it would seem wise to appoint Penny Wright acting staff head from January first until such time as the Association has sufficient funds to attract a senior professional. I urge consideration of this.

Finally, as you know, I am a life-member of NAIRO and, while my relationship with the Association will obviously change, I shall retain an active and participatory interest in its future.

My best wishes to you, the Officers, the Board of Directors and all NAIRO members as the Association moves ahead toward new program goals and priorities.

Fraternally & Sincerely

Fred

Dear Mr. Anthony:

I regret that you were unable to attend our summer planning meeting on February 20, 1970. In that meeting we discussed concepts and procedures of the Atlanta Urban Corps. The response to the presentation by the group of social action agencies that were assembled has been quite rewarding.

There are several agencies that, in our judgment, would afford especially good opportunities for students to be of community service. The Southern Regional Council is one such agency. I feel that there are several areas of research, implementation, and organization within your scope which could benefit from the services of interested students. At the same time I feel these projects, if typical of the SRC, operation could be significant benefit to the students all-around growth.

If you have any questions regarding our program or the development of internships please call. We are most eager to work with you to establish a meaningful relationship for us both.

Overall Plans for the Annual Meeting of NAIRO

Two basic subjects seem to be of overriding importance to NAIRO members this year. These, as they relate to minorities in our country, are political development and economic development. While these are broad topics and will give us an opportunity to discuss almost any specific issue -- for instance -- education, a particular effort will be made to address the meeting specifically to the subjects of where we stand in political development and where we stand and what we ought to be doing relative to economic development. Of course, every effort will be made to focus within these topics on all minorities, all geographical areas, and rural as well as urban situations.

Physically, we plan to keep speeches to an absolute minimum and to have the meeting structures in such a way that a relatively large number of small groups will meet to deal with specific topics. The effort will be to have a maximum of genuine exchange between knowledgeable and concerned people.

NAIRO TASK FORCE ON EXECUTIVE RESPONSIBILITY IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS

CHARGE To prepare a new revised and updated edition of the NAIRO report on Executive Responsibility in Intergroup Relations", which was presented to President John F. Kennedy in 1961 and which he regarded as "an example of the vital service which NAIRO can render on an increasing scale".

To consider some of the differences between now and 1961

(In 1961, we were trying to get intergroup relations concerns recognized by the Federal Executive Branch. Now, the civil rights and poverty revolution is the major domestic concern of every branch of government on every level. In 1961, we were trying to get some intergroup relations specialists hired and their services more widely used in departments and agencies. Now, the Federal government is the largest employer of intergroup relations specialists. In 1961, we were trying to get the President to exert civil rights leadership. Now, the President has in many ways, pre-empted the field. Since 1961, we have had such developments as the White House Conference on Civil Rights; the death of Martin Luther King, Jr., and Robert Kennedy; a decline in the forcefulness of the nation-wide civil rights movement; a 1968 Civil Rights and Fair Housing Law; a feeling among many, that the future of American society in the next decade will depend upon the new progressive forces of our time: the minority poor and the students. Also, the present trend toward participatory democracy, and the new Federal Administration which takes office in January, and which must address itself to the demands for a radical reconstruction of the American environment.)

September 1 - October 25, 1957

The following chronology sets forth the sequence of events in the integration crisis at Little Rock Central High School. Also reprinted here are the editorials which reflect the reaction of the Arkansas Gazette at each stage of development.

The majority of the editorials were written by the Gazette's executive editor, Harry S. Ashmore, although some were contributed by other members of the editorial page staff. They reflect the considered policy judgment of this newspaper.

Chronology of Events

Here is a chronology of events leading to the present Little Rock school integration stalemate:

May 17—The United States Supreme Court ruled racial segregation in the public schools unconstitutional.

May 22 — The Little Rock School Board issued a policy statement that said it would comply with the Supreme Court decision when the Court outlined the method to be followed and the time to be allowed.

May 24—The Little Rock School Board adopted a plan of gradual integration under which high school-level grades would be integrated starting September, 1957, if a third general high school (Hall High) were completed by that time. During the following six years, the remaining classes would be integrated with the lower grades the last to be affected. Students would be permitted to transfer to schools where their race was in the majority.

May 31—The Supreme Court instructed local school boards and federal district courts to integrate the schools at the earliest possible date.

January 24 — Twenty-seven Negroes attempt to register in Little Rock schools but were refused.

February 8—A suit filed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People charged that 33 Negro children had been denied admittance to four Little Rock schools solely because of race.

March 1—The School Board called the NAACP demand for hasty integration "unwise, unworkable and fraught with danger."

August 28—Federal Judge John E. Miller dismissed the NAACP suit, declaring that the Little Rock School Board had acted in "utmost good faith" in setting up its plan of gradual integration. He retained jurisdiction to see that the Board went on with its plan. The NAACP appealed.

February 19—The Arkansas Senate gave final legislative approval to four "segregation bills" which (1) created the State Sovereignty Commission; (2) removed the mandatory school attendance requirement at all integrated schools; (3) required the registration of certain individuals and organizations; and (4) authorized school boards to use school funds in the fight against integration.

February 26—Governor Faubus signed all four segregation bills into law.

March 16—Wayne Upton and Henry V. Rath were elected to the School Board by conclusive margins over two avowed segregationists, Robert Ewing Brown and Dr. George P. Branscum. Upton and Rath had endorsed the gradual integration plan.

April 27—The Eighth Circuit United States Court of Appeals at St. Louis upheld the School Board plan by upholding Judge Miller's dismissal of the NAACP suit.

July 10—NAACP announced that it would not appeal further its suit of February 8, 1956.

August 16—Ten Arkansas Negro ministers contest the validity of the four segregation acts in a suit filed in federal District Court. (Suit still pending.)

August 16—William F. ("Billy") Rector, Little Rock insurance man, asked for a declaratory judgment in Pulaski Chancery Court on the validity and effect of the segregation acts. (Still pending).

August 20—Mrs. Eva Wilbern, mother of a Central High student, sought an order in Pulaski Chancery Court that would force Little Rock School officials to permit Central High students to transfer to a segregated school if they did not wish to attend integrated classes. (Still pending).

August 27—Mrs. Clyde Thomason, recording secretary of the Mothers' League of Little Rock Central High School, filed suit in Pulaski Chancery Court, seeking a temporary injunction against school integration.

August 29—Pulaski Chancellor Murray O. Reed granted the temporary injunction sought by Mrs. Thomason, basing it on the testimony of Governor Faubus that integration would lead to violence.

August 30—Federal District Judge Ronald N. Davies nullified the Pulaski Chancery Court injunction and ordered the School Board to proceed with its gradual integration plan with the opening of school September 3. Another order issued by Judge Davies enjoined "all persons in any manner, directly or indirectly," from interfering with the integration plan.

September 2, Governor Faubus ordered the National Guard to Central High School because of "evidence of disorder and threats of disorder" and because the litigation on the state anti-integration laws had not been completed. After that the School Board instructed nine Negro students who had registered at Central High not to attempt to attend school.

September 3—Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies ordered that integration be started September 4. Governor Faubus announced that the National Guard would remain at Central High.

September 4 — Nine Negroes attempted to enter Central High but were repulsed by the National Guard. Mayor Mann termed Governor Faubus' claim of threatened violence a "hoax." Mr. Faubus telegraphed Persident Eisenhower to stop "unwarranted interference of federal agents."

September 5—The School Board asked Federal District Court to temporarily suspend its integration plan. President Eisenhower notified Mr. Faubus that the federal constitution "will be upheld by every legal means" and asked that he give "full co-operation to the United States District Court."

September 6—Governor Faubus offered to tell federal authorities, in another telegram to Mr. Eisenhower, evidence of the threatened violence to which he had alluded.

September 7—Federal Judge Davies denied the School Board's request for a temporary suspension of the integration plan and ordered Central High integrated Monday.

September 8—Mr. Faubus went on national television to re-affirm his stand and insist that the federal government retreat from its demand for integration. He declined to produce evidence of reported violence. He was "the preservator of the peace," he said. Eight of Little Rock's 10 aldermen sided with the governor in his feud with Mayor Mann.

September 9—Judge Davies directed federal authorities to bring proceedings for an injunction against Mr. Faubus and two National Guard officers to prevent them from interfering with integration.

September 14—Governor Faubus confers with President Eisenhower at the vacation White House at Newport, R. I.

September 20 — Judge Davies ruled that Mr. Faubus had not used troops to preserve law and order and enjoined him and the National Guard from interfering with integration. The governor's attorneys, in an extraordinary move, walked out of the hearing. In the early evening Mr. Faubus removed the National Guard from Central High School, ending his 17-day military encounter with the federal government. Little Rock police moved in.

September 23—A mob of 1,000 rampaging whites fought, cursed and wept as the nine Negro children entered a side door at Central High. City police couldn't handle the mob. Shortly before noon the nine Negroes were removed for their safety. President Eisenhower called the rioting disgraceful and signed a proclamation clearing the way for use of federal troops to stop it.

September 24—Members of the 101st Airborne Division, 1,100 officers and men, rolled into Little Rock at nightfall after flying to the Little Rock Air Force Base from Fort Campbell, Ky. The Arkansas National Guard was placed under federal orders and mobilized.

September 25 — Under troop escort, the nine students entered Central High School. Brooks Hays called on Little Rock's "latent leadership" to assert itself.

October 1—President Eisenhower said Mr. Faubus reneged on an agreement conveyed to him by four Southern governors just as all parties were on the brink of a solution for removing federal troops from Little Rock. The Southern governors accused Mr. Faubus of changing the meaning of his statement after the president had accepted it.

October 2—Twenty-five business and civic leaders at Little Rock adopted a "Statement of Objective and Rededication of Principles," calling for peaceful compliance with court orders.

October 7—Governor Faubus charged that federal troops had invaded the privacy of girls' dressing rooms at Central High. The White House said the charge was vulgar and untrue. Mr. Faubus said "We'll prove it when the time comes."

October 9—Mr. Faubus took the position at a press conference that only the withdrawal of the Negro students would end the crisis over integration at Central High School.

October 11—About 600 segregationist-minded persons attended a prayer service at Central Baptist Church, where ministers prayed for the removal of troops and for Governor Faubus.

October 12—Between 6,000 and 7,000 persons of all faiths gathered at 85 churches and synagogues to pray for a solution to the integration impasse.

October 15—Six Little Rock businessmen met privately with Mr. Faubus to discuss the integration crisis. There was no indication of progress. Army Secretary Brucker ordered 500 of the 1,000 paratroopers at Central High School withdrawn.

October 17—Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies dismissed a petition by Mrs. Margaret Jackson asking that a three-judge court order federal troops removed from Central High School.

October 18—Mrs. Jackson's attorney, Kenneth C. Coffelt said he would ask for the impeachment of Judge Davies because the judge "acted arbitrarily and without any legal precedent" in dismissing the suit for removal of troops. Governor Faubus said the state might file suit for removal of the troops.

October 21—The Army started releasing from active duty about 8,700 federalized Arkansas National Guardsmen and estimated the release would be completed by the end of October. It was disclosed that 1,800 men would be retained on an individual basis.

October 22—Representative E. C. ("Took") Gathings asked the Senate Judiciary Committee to investigate Judge Davies' handling of litigation in the integration dispute, and asked also that the FBI's "Gestapo methods" in investigations during the crisis be probed.

October 23—Governor Faubus assailed the editors and publisher of the Gazette whom he accused of slanting the news with reference to him in the integration dispute. The Arkansas County Judges Association, to whom Mr. Faubus made his speech, commended the governor's actions in the crisis and condemned President Eisenhower for sending federal troops to Little Rock.

October 24 — Governor Faubus said certain moves were under way that could lead to mediation conferences in the integration dispute. Mr. Faubus said he hoped that the resignation of Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr. meant a change in the attitude of the Justice Department "from political motivation to one of impartial enforcement."

A Time of Testing

In his clear and forthright ruling in the Little Rock school case Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies has swept away the legal confusion generated by the apparent conflict between state and federal laws.

The judge ordered the Little Rock School Board to proceed on schedule with its plan for limited, gradual integration at the High School level—and he enjoined "all persons, in any manner, directly or indirectly, from interfering with the plan of integration as approved by the United States District Court."

This means that on Tuesday some 15 Negro children will be enrolled at Little Rock Central High School along with more than 2,000 whites. There are those who have suggested that this cannot be done without inciting the populace of this city to violence. They have, we believe, too little faith in the respect of our people for law and order.

We do not believe any organized group of citizens would under any circumstances undertake to do violence to school children of any race. And if there are any individuals who might embark upon such a reckless and indefensible course we have no doubt that our law enforcement officers can and will preserve order.

This is a time of testing for all of us. Few of us are entirely happy over the necessary developments in the wake of changes in the law. But certainly we must recognize that the School Board is simply carrying out its clear duty—and is doing so in the ultimate best interests of all the school children of Little Rock, white and colored alike.

We are confident that the citizens of Little Rock will demonstrate on Tuesday for the world to see that we are a law-abiding people.

An Editorial

The Crisis Mr. Faubus Made

Little Rock arose yesterday to gaze upon the incredible spectacle of an empty high school surrounded by National Guard troops called out by Governor Faubus to protect life and property against a mob that never materialized.

Mr. Faubus says he based this extraordinary action on reports of impending violence. Dozens of local reporters and national correspondents worked through the day yesterday without verifying the few facts the governor offered to explain why his appraisal was so different from that of local officials—who have asked for no such action.

Mr. Faubus contends that he has done nothing that can be construed as defiance of the federal government.

Federal Judge Ronald N. Davies last night accepted the governor's statement at its face value, and ordered the School Board to proceed on the assumption that the National Guard would protect the right of the nine enrolled Negro children to enter the high school without interference.

Now it remains for Mr. Faubus to decide whether he intends to pose what could be the most serious constitutional question to face the national government since the Civil War. The effect of his action so far is to interpose his state office between the local School District and the United States Court. The government, as Judge Davies implied last night, now has no choice but to proceed against such interference or abandon its right to enforce its rulings and decisions.

Thus the issue is no longer segregation vs. integration The question has now become the supremacy of the government of the United States in all matters of law. And clearly the federal government cannot let this issue remain unsolved, no matter what the cost to this community.

Until last Thursday the matter of gradual, limited integration in the Little Rock schools was a local problem which had been well and wisely handled by responsible local officials who have had—and we believe still have—the support of a majority of the people of this city. On that day Mr. Faubus appeared in Chancery Court on behalf of a small but militant minority and chose to make it a state problem. On Monday night he called out the National Guard and made it a national problem.

It is one he must now live with, and the rest of us must suffer under. If Mr. Faubus in fact has no intention of defying federal authority now is the time for him to call a halt to the resistance which is preventing the carrying out of a duly entered court order. And certainly he should do so before his own actions become the cause of the violence he professes to fear.

Of Arkansas And North Carolina

When a handful of Negro children prepared to enter Little Rock Central High School under court order Governor Faubus declared an emergency—and now one exists.

When a handful of Negro children prepared to enter white schools in three North Carolina cities Governor Hodges declared that there would be no emergency—and now all is calm in his state.

This contrast is of telling significance. These western and eastern anchors of the northernmost tier of Southern states have much the same topography and racial composition, and until this week they had followed the same moderate approach toward the federal government's more recent rulings in the field of race relations.

It is no doubt true, as Governor Hodges said this week, that the majority of North Carolinians continue to favor voluntary segregation of the schools.

It is similarly true that the majority of Arkansas citizens continue to prefer segregation of the schools, although the percentage figures Governor Faubus is constantly spinning out of his head are without visible proof.

But it is beyond this point that the governor of Arkansas and the governor of North Carolina quit speaking the same language this week.

Governor Hodges took no stand either way on the fact of limited school integration undertaken by local authorities at Greensboro, Charlotte and Winston-Salem. The North Carolina governor simply said that "North Carolinians do not like lawlessness" and made it quite clear that anybody who had other ideas would be promptly dealt with. The handful of irresponsibles who have sought to cause trouble, as in the case of the white boy who threw a stick at a younger Negro girl at Charlotte, were immediately taken in hand—and by local authorities.

So on the second day of school in Charlotte there was no trouble at all. The Charlotte Observer reported that the city had settled down again. "The matter is over and done with and I do not believe there is even a remote possibility of any further trouble," said the editor of the Observer.

This is how it could have been in Little Rock had Governor Faubus not taken it upon himself to intervene in the situation with public statements expressing his fear of violence and in fact inciting it. When he called out the National Guard he did so without consulting any of the local authorities who bear the direct responsibility for maintaining law and order. He did not assist these officials but in fact defied them—just as he has defied the federal courts.

This was the significant point made by Mayor Woodrow Mann in his statement expressing deep resentment at "Mr. Faubus' unwarranted interference with the internal affairs of this city." And the mayor pointed out that his own police force had had no reports of inter-racial strife even after almost a week of extreme statements from the governor.

It is no answer to say, as Mr. Faubus has said in effect, that peace has prevailed in Little Rock only because he turned out the Guard. The Guardsmen are concentrated at three isolated points. The Negro and white citizens of this community are scattered all over the city, and so far they have quietly gone about their daily business without any friction.

No one can say now that this situation can continue indefinitely —not so long as the National Guardsmen in effect protect and encourage the whites who assemble daily at Central High School. Yet the terrible truth is that this unseemly spectacle is essential to the position Mr. Faubus has taken in his calculated course of direct defiance of the federal government. In order to sustain his position the governor must have a threat of violence. If the impasse continues long enough the chances are he will have it in fact.

We believe Mayor Mann spoke the sentiment of this community when he said:

> "I am sure a great majority of the people of Little Rock share my deep resentment at the manner in which the governor has chosen to use this city as a pawn in what clearly is a political design of his own. If any racial trouble does develop the blame rests squarely on the doorstep of the Governor's Mansion."

The School Issue And the Courts

In his lengthy telegram to President Eisenhower asking for understanding and support, Governor Faubus said among other things that he had not had his "day in court" to explain why his fear of possible violence was so great that he had decided to call out the National Guard to prevent integration at Central High School.

We believe that the governor should have such a day—and that it should be in federal court as soon as possible.

There is, as it happens, a clear precedent. In a Texas case in 1932 the governor of that state called out the militia on the ground that the effort to enforce a federal law limiting oil production would produce violence. In a unanimous opinion written by Chief Justice Hughes the Supreme Court rejected two basic contentions of the Texas officials—first that the governor was personally beyond the jurisdiction of the federal courts, and second that the reason for his calling out the militia was not a proper matter for the court to consider. The Supreme Court held that the reverse was true in both instances—that the governor was subject to injunction in any constitutional matter and that his action in calling out the Guard to prevent violence where none yet existed was really the heart of the matter.

And the Court significantly noted further that in any event the only proper purpose for calling out the militia was to enforce the law, not to prevent its enforcement.

These are precisely the questions Governor Faubus has posed in the present case. Here as in the Texas action the heart of the matter is whether in fact the threat of violence was so real that Mr. Faubus was justified in preventing by force of arms the carrying out of a federal court order.

It is a question that must be settled if the impasse is to be resolved.

We hope, therefore, that Mr. Faubus is prepared to accept his "day in court" if it is offered to him, and in the act of accepting also indicate his willingness to abide by the court's final decision.

If he refuses the only assumption will be that he is embarked upon a course deliberately designed to test the powers of his state office against those of the federal government. Having used force himself he would thus invite the federal government to reply in kind—with consequences that defy the imagination.

A Major Question: Is This Arkansas?

One major question which has arisen out of the issue of integration at Central High School is whether the nation-wide publicity the incident has brought will damage Arkansas's progress toward industrialization.

Some authorities do not want to be quoted on any aspect of a controversy which has been so heated. Some say there is yet no accurate way of determining the effect of this ugly spectacle on the minds of people who have been eyeing the nation-wide "This Is Arkansas" advertisements. And some feel that industrialists are more concerned with integration in their factories than in their communities' schools.

But Everett Tucker Jr., who as industrial director of the Little Rock Chamber of Commerce should be counted high among those authorities, did not equivocate on this question. Said Mr. Tucker:

"[The integration dispute] is going to set our industrial program back considerably. Such questions are being raised increasingly as time goes on. This has been one sphere where we have had no hesitancy in answering. We could make one of the best cases [for good race relations] of any city in the South.

"Now—and for the unpredictable future—whenever the subject comes to mind of an industry planning a Southern plant, it will immediately think of Little Rock as a 'hotbed' of segregation, which is not true at all."

According to reliable sources, one enterprise is now watching the Little Rock situation carefully and apparently with concern. Another one finally agreed to locate at Little Rock only after satisfying assurances had been given—as they could be at that time—concerning racial conditions.

The fact is that whatever the feelings of any industrialist may be on the issue of integration, he wants to settle in a well-ordered community which is not torn by strife, racial or otherwise. And the fact that the current situation is confined to Little Rock, while other Arkansas cities handled the problem peaceably, is likely to have little effect on the thinking of those who read an advertisement proudly announcing that "This Is Arkansas." When he turns to Page One of his newspaper these days, he may ask himself this question:

"Is This Arkansas?"

Reflections in A Hurricane's Eye

This is written in a moment of relative calm — something like the eye of the hurricane of emotion that has beset this city and this state for the past week and is due to resume in full force a few hours from now when Governor Faubus appears before a national television audience to explain his position and defend it if he can.

Sunday is a good day for calm reflection, and we hope Arkansans are so using it. Sunday is a good day, too, to be reminded that in the current crisis there are questions not only of law and of politics, but of morality.

Somehow, some time the present impasse between Mr. Faubus and the federal courts must be resolved. That is the problem, and it is an extraordinarily complex one, that faces the responsible leaders of the city, the state and the nation. We can assume that they are working on it, and we can pray that they will find a way out before the final show-down of force against force which Mr. Faubus has so far invited.

But it is also an inescapable problem for each one of us. Somehow, some time, every Arkansan is going to have to be counted. We are going to have to decide what kind of people we are — whether we obey the law only when we approve of it, or whether we obey it no matter how distasteful we may find it.

And this, finally, is the only issue before the people of Arkansas. It is quite true that most of us would have preferred to continue segregation in the public schools. But it is equally true that we cannot do so lawfully except with the voluntary consent of the Negro people whose children have been declared legally eligible for admission to schools heretofore reserved for whites.

It is important to remember that for the most part the Negroes of this community have volunteered not to exercise the new privilege guaranteed them by federal law. They have accepted a plan of integration that involves only a tiny handful of members of their race.

They have done so reluctantly on their side, but with good will — because they have recognized that the School Board of Little Rock was proceeding in good faith to work out the best practical solution to what all parties agree is a problem that cries out for time and patience.

This is the spirit in which the great majority of the white and colored people of this community accepted the School Board plan. Only a small and militant minority of whites urged upon Mr. Faubus the extreme course of interposing his state authority directly against the order of a United States Court.

We believe the great majority of whites supported the School Board last Tuesday—and still do despite the sensational events of recent days.

There are those, of course, who admire Mr. Faubus's courage, and in the calculated confusion of the hour have even come to believe that he may yet stand against the government of the United States.

There were also those, we suppose, who admired King Canute when he ordered the sea to turn back. But the sea did not turn back —and there is no indication that the federal government can or will abandon the authority of the United States Supreme Court.

The legal precedent is firm and clear. In the 1930's the governor of Texas called out the National Guard to prevent the enforcement of a federal law. The unanimous opinion written by Chief Justice Hughes concluded:

> If this extreme position could be deemed to be well taken, it is manifest that the fiat of a state Governor, and not the Constitution of the United States, would be the supreme law of the land; that the restrictions of the Federal Constitution upon the exercise of state power would be but impotent phrases, the futility of which the state may at any time disclose by the simple process of transferring powers of legislation to the Governor to be exercised by him, beyond control, upon his assertion of necessity. Under our system of government, such a conclusion is obviously untenable. There is no such avenue of escape from the paramount authority of the Federal Constitution.

This then is the law as interpreted by the Court whose voice on constitutional matters is final. It is the law that in the end will prevail — and on Sunday there must have been many who prayed that its enforcement will not increase the already heavy damage that has been done to the spirit of good will and brotherly love that prevailed before armed, uniformed men suddenly appeared unannounced on our quiet streets.

September 10, 1957.

—And Now Time Is Running Out

With each move and countermove Governor Faubus has drawn closer to a final show-down with the federal authorities. And now time is running out.

The Justice Department has been brought into the case and directed to prepare injunctive procedures against Mr. Faubus, his adjutant general, and the local commander of the National Guard units stationed around Central High School.

This means that unless the impasse can be resolved in the meantime by negotiation Mr. Faubus will face his final fateful decision—whether or not to accept the jurisdiction of the United States Court and carry out its directions, whatever they finally may be.

It is a moment of terrible decision for all concerned. Judge Davies has delayed it for more than a week, but during that period Mr. Faubus has given no indication of retreating from his position that the Guard troops were and are essential to the preservation of order in this community.

So the Court is now prepared to move with the full weight of the United States government behind it. No one could now predict what form its ultimate action will take, but no one has any reason to doubt that whatever may be necessary to uphold the federal law will be done.

Behind the scenes informal, unofficial negotiation is under way. And there is still reason to believe that the federal officials will avoid the show-down if they honorably can. Mr. Faubus, we believe, is of the same mind.

So there is still hope, then, as the last hours tick away that this tragic dispute can remain a matter of law and therefore subject to orderly settlement by judicial action—and that it will not be resolved into a contest of force against force.

The matter of how and why this impasse came about is no longer of moment. The only consideration of consequence is that it must be resolved—without further disorder, without abandoning the structure of the law, and without lasting bitterness if this is still possible.

We cannot believe that in the end responsible men on either side of this great, constitutional crisis will have it otherwise.

September 11, 1957.

Mr. Faubus Accepts Federal Jurisdiction

When Governor Faubus appeared before the Mansion yesterday to accept a subpoena for his appearance in United States District Court 10 days from now we assume that he also accepted the jurisdiction of that Court and will abide by its decision.

If this assumption is correct we may once more be on the only path that can lead to an orderly resolution of the impasse which was created when Mr. Faubus called out the National Guard and ordered them to prevent the entry of nine Negro children at Central High School.

Those Guardsmen, the governor indicated yesterday, will remain in position outside the school—presumably throughout the 10-day waiting period the Court allowed before proceeding with its injunctive process. We would like to think that the jeering crowd of whites outside the High School will disappear and that some semblance of order can be restored to the area.

The war, of course, is not over, but this 10-day armistice may serve the useful purpose of allowing all parties to consider the future as well as the present. It is not, in any event, a pleasant prospect, but if Mr. Faubus has now abandoned any plan he may have had for continued defiance of federal authority the present damage can be halted and much of it repaired.

The great need is for calm and reason. We have a better chance of obtaining it as a result of Mr. Faubus' actions yesterday.

September 12, 1957.

President Eisenhower And Governor Faubus

It is, we think, proper that Governor Faubus requested a meeting with President Eisenhower, and that Mr. Eisenhower agreed to see him.

It will not be, of course, in any sense a negotiating session. The final resolution of the impasse Mr. Faubus created when he called out his state troops to halt the execution of a United States Court order will come in the Court itself.

But some of the problems Mr. Faubus has raised clearly involve the executive branch of the government. It is well that Mr. Eisenhower should hear personally Mr. Faubus' viewpoint. If, as Mr. Faubus has insisted all along, his sole purpose was to preserve the peace he may even ask Mr. Eisenhower's help—and we presume he will get it.

But perhaps most helpful of all is that the meeting should serve to bring the controversy back into the realm of reason and end the unseemly display of naked force which has shocked and alarmed the nation and the world.

It is this newspaper's faith that no problem is beyond resolution by reasonable men of good will. And, as has been demonstrated in this city in recent days, when the irresponsibles rode high in the saddle, no problem can be solved by unreasonable men with hatred in their hearts.

September 13, 1957.

Brooks Hays Has Done His Duty

In a time of crisis a heavy personal responsibility rests upon elected public officials. They can betray their people by their actions. And they can also betray them by their failure to act.

In a real sense Representative Brooks Hays was performing a public service beyond the call of duty when he intervened in the Central High School impasse and established contact between Governor Faubus and the White House.

He could have stayed out of what is an obviously explosive political situation—and most politicians would have been tempted to do so. Instead he followed the dictates of his conscience and initiated the process by which Mr. Faubus will confer with Mr. Eisenhower at Newport tomorrow.

There cannot be any final resolution of the impasse at Newport, or even in a real sense any bargaining in that direction. That settlement can and will come as a result of further action by the United States Court. But Mr. Hays interprets the implication of the meeting as one in which both parties are "consistently paying tribute to the rule of law."

This, certainly represents a considerable gain. Arkansas, and for that matter the nation, owes Brooks Hays a great debt.

Governor Faubus Got His Answer

In an effort to resolve a constitutional crisis which was wholly of his own making, Governor Faubus has now flown to Newport for an emergency conference with the president of the United States.

When it was all over yesterday afternoon it was clear that Mr. Faubus had obtained no concession from Mr. Eisenhower beyond a friendly smile.

And Mr. Faubus himself had to walk before the cameras and end the long train of double-talk with which he has sought to cloak his posture of naked defiance of the federal courts. Stripped of their face-saving phrases, here were his key words:

> "I have never expressed any personal opinion regarding the Supreme Court decision of 1954 which ordered integration. That is not relevant. That decision is the law of the land and must be obeyed."

Then, with Mr. Faubus' capitulation safely on the record, Mr. Eisenhower applied the clincher when in his own statement he said:

"The governor stated his intention to respect the decision of the United States District Court and to give his full cooperation in carrying out his responsibilities in respect to these decisions.

"I am sure that it is the desire of the governor, not only to serve the supreme law of the land but to use the influence of his office in orderly progress of the plans which are already the subject of the order of the Court."

The District Court, of course, is the one in which Mr. Faubus has been summoned to appear before Judge Ronald N. Davies to show cause why he should not be enjoined from obstructing the law.

And the plan to which the president referred is the one which the Little Rock School Board worked out and had every reason to believe could peacefully be carried through before Mr. Faubus threw his armed troops around Central High School to forcibly prevent the entry of nine Negro children.

Many important questions remain to be resolved. Mr. Faubus has said nothing at this writing in regard to the possibility of keeping the National Guard on duty—but with new orders to preserve the peace against those who would thwart the law.

But the big question that Mr. Faubus raised has been clearly answered. The federal government will not back down. The law will be enforced. Mr. Faubus can join his efforts to that end, or he can sit it out. But he cannot expect to longer halt the machinery of the courts.

And so the peace that Mr. Faubus shattered can be restored to this town and if he no more than subsides, the responsible, law-abiding citizens of Little Rock can get on with their job of trying to heal the wounds he caused.

Mr. Faubus Also Needs a Dictionary

Perhaps the most remarkable of the many remarkable statements Governor Faubus has made in recent days was his comment at Newport "that changes necessitated by court orders cannot be accomplished overnight."

This, of course, is a statement of fact. No one, including the United States Supreme Court, contemplated that the shift from segregated to integrated schools could be accomplished in any Southern community at one stroke.

The real question here is Mr. Faubus' definition of "overnight."

The essential facts in the Little Rock case, which Mr. Faubus is obviously attempting to obscure are these:

(1). The Little Rock plan of integration was voluntarily evolved by the Little Rock School Board over a period of three years. It was a legal design intended to accomplish the minimum integration over the longest period of time permissible under the Supreme Court ruling.

(2). The plan was presented to the people of Little Rock in these terms and fully explained. School Superintendent Virgil Blossom himself made an estimated 200 speeches in this three-year period setting forth the plan in detail to interested white and colored parent groups.

(3). The National Association For the Advancement of Colored People, objecting that the plan was too gradual, brought court action against the School Board. In federal District Court, before an Arkansas judge, the plan was held constitutional. On appeal to the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals it was again upheld.

(4). In its final working, the Little Rock plan would admit a grand total of nine Negro children to previous all-white schools in this school year. Further integration would be spread over a period of seven years and the actual overlap of white and colored school population would be held to a minimum. On a voluntary basis, all colored schools would be continued for the foreseeable future.

Is this, by any rational definition, a program of "overnight" integration?

It seems to us, on the contrary, to be a sound design for meeting a difficult educational problem without any real change in the pattern of social segregation which prevails here and will continue for the foreseeable future.

Yet Mr. Faubus in effect has rejected this plan, carefully contrived by the local officials who bear direct responsibility for the public schools. Although he had never displayed either knowledge of, or concern with, the Little Rock program until he suddenly embarked upon a course designed to block it, he among other things assumed to himself the role of educational expert.

According to the United Press Mr. Faubus at Newport asked the president for a year's delay, in return for which the governor offered "to help prepare the people of Little Rock for integration."

And here, it seems to us, is the final irony. Here is a governor, who not only refused to support local school officials but in the end defied them, saying that he would educate the people to obey the law.

On the record to date it seems to us that Mr. Faubus was closer to the mark when he said, in the wake of his unwarranted action in calling out the National Guard, that all he could do for his people was weep for them.

September 18, 1957

Mr. Faubus' Poll and Some Percentages

In pursuance of his preoccupation with polls and percentage figures Governor Faubus said during his Sunday night TV turn with Mike Wallace that a poll of the Little Rock area had shown that "82 per cent of the people agreed that violence would have occurred had I not taken the action I did."

The fact that our own informal poll has revealed not one person who was polled by Governor Faubus' "scientific" pollsters is of no consequence, because the governor's 82 per cent figure is meaningless on its face: The man on the street has no source of private information on which to base such a judgment.

Governor Faubus's numbers kick started in the Democratic primary last summer, when he announced that 85 per cent of the people of Arkansas were in favor of continuing segregated schools, a bland assertion that invited comparison with a Little Rock radio station's assertion that 86 per cent of the people prefer country music. The temptation was to wonder how much overlap there was.

But by now the governor's magic 85 per cent figure has been firmly entrenched in Arkansas mythology. A great many of the people (precise percentage figure indeterminable) now firmly believe that 85 per cent of the people voted last year for segregation.

The actual percentage figures on the election in question—the November general election vote on three separate segregation proposals — break down this way:

Fifty-six per cent of the people supported the most extreme of the proposals, the Johnson "nullification" amendment; 61 per cent supported Governor Faubus's own interposition resolution; 72 per cent supported the most innocuous of the proposals, the initiated school assignment act, patterned after a Virginia plan since declared unconstitutional by a federal court.

Against those state-wide expressions of sentiment, we have a more recent referendum on the specific issue of the Little Rock School Board's court-approved plan for integration by stages. In that election 62 per cent of the people voted against one of two School Board candidates pledged to try to upset the existing plan; 64 per cent voted against the other.

From all these percentages, we submit that we and the governor may have been talking about two different things. It seems likely to us that 85 per cent, and more, of the white adults of this state would vote in favor of segregated schools, if the question could be put to them without qualification. However, we doubt that any sort of majority would so vote in favor of outright defiance of the federal government—which remains the only issue before the people of Arkansas.

Peace in Nashville, Chaos in Little Rock

One week after the school's opened under Nashville's integration plan the newspaper headlines said: Nashville Integration Crisis Over; School Officials Expect No More Trouble.

Two weeks after the schools opened in Little Rock the headlines around the world were still blaring news of the great crisis—and the National Guardsmen still stood around Central High with their bayonets aimed figuratively at the nine colored children who were denied entrance on Governor Faubus' order.

All this, despite the fact that there was real violence in Nashville and none at all in Little Rock.

Why the difference? The answer is in the attitude of the governor of Tennessee and the governor of Arkansas.

Governor Faubus says he has acted in such extreme fashion to preserve order. Governor Clement, however, has acted in the past —and stood ready to act this time —not only to preserve order but to uphold the law.

Thus Nashville has peace and Little Rock has an impasse that has already done immeasurable harm to the community.

In a recent television interview Governor Clement noted that in last year's Clinton troubles he called out the National Guard to quell the local demonstration and protect the right of the Negro children to attend school—as they had been ordered to do by a federal court. But, he noted, he did so only after a formal request for help from local authorities. And he did not order out the Guard in Nashville because no such request was made, and in fact was not necessary because the local police acted promptly and efficiently to take the situation in hand.

Mr. Faubus' course has been directly opposite in the Little Rock case.

He refused to indicate, as did the governors of North Carolina and Tennessee, that he would support local authorities in upholding the law. On the contrary he took it upon himself to issue dire warnings of possible violence beyond their control—and then refused to divulge the sources of his information. Then, with no request for aid and even over the protests of responsible local officials, he called out the Guard before the High School even opened.

In the intervening two weeks the Guard's mission has simply been to keep the Negro children from attending school. Neither the Guardsmen nor the State Police have followed the normal police procedure of moving to disperse the dwindling crowd which has assembled there daily. It is fair to say that the presence of the governor's forces has simply constituted a standing invitation to the assorted hecklers and a guarantee that they could without molestation keep watch for possible re-entry of the Negro students.

It is true that there is a difference in the Tennessee and Arkansas laws governing use of the Guard; Governor Clement is specificially forbidden to move without a local request for aid while Governor Faubus apparently is not.

But it is abundantly clear that there is also a great contrast between the two governors' concepts of their public duty. Mr. Clement has used his powers to uphold the law and preserve the peace; Mr. Faubus so far has used his to thwart the law and preserve a state of disorder.

September 20, 1957

Summer Will Come Again . . .

Now the scene shifts back to the federal court room, where it should have been all along.

This in itself brings a sort of order to the unseemly proceedings which have afflicted this community. Governor Faubus' apparent acceptance of the jurisdiction of the United States District Court means there can be an orderly resolution of the impasse Mr. Faubus created when he called out the National Guard to block the Court's order.

Yet at the same time Mr. Faubus has made it quite clear that he will not himself contribute to an orderly solution. He will, he has said, withdraw his forces from Central High School if he is ordered by the Court to do so. But he will do nothing to uphold the law and prevent the violence his flagrant actions have invited.

Here, then, is the naked political design under which the governor has operated from the beginning—and let no Arkansan forget it in the days ahead when the real issue is clouded by legalisms.

The good offices of Representative Brooks Hays, who served as an honest broker between the White House and the Mansion in an effort to negotiate a settlement failed because Orval Faubus could not bring himself to make the political sacrifice the reversal of his policy of defiance would have entailed.

The governor knows that he can retain the fickle loyalty of the extreme segregationists only by going all the way with them. To deviate, to return to the course of reason and honor and respect for the law, would be not only to lose their votes but cause them to turn on him with all the fury they have unleashed against him in the past.

So Orval Faubus has done what Jim Johnson promised to do in the campaign which Mr. Faubus won and Mr. Johnson lost. He has adopted the course preached before the Citizens Councils by Amis Guthridge. He has defied the government of the United States—and has gotten away with it so far.

In the end, of course, he will not get away with it. But he is winning now in the limited political terms in which he deals. In those terms, indeed, this may be his finest hour; he is a hero to the mob and behind his barricade of bayonets he is untouched by the shame he has brought to his more responsible fellow citizens.

But time passes and passions die and reason somehow is restored. Summer will come again, and a new campaign—and Mr. Faubus will have to count what he has lost against what he has gained.

It is too early to strike the political balance.

But the moral balance has been determined. In a time of testing for all the people of Arkansas Orval E. Faubus was found wanting.

September 21, 1957

Orval Faubus Vs. The Law of the Land

Yesterday afternoon Federal Judge Ronald Davies, after listening to competent testimony, held that the people of Little Rock are law-abiding citizens.

Last night Governor Faubus, who refused the day in court he once complained he had been denied, in effect held to the contrary.

In his television broadcast Mr. Faubus rejected the findings of a duly constituted court of law and substituted his own judgment. He did so, he contended, because of the Court's bias. And to sustain this charge Mr. Faubus argued that Judge Davies had issued his injunction on the basis of the testimony of "carefully screened" witnesses.

The witnesses who testified that they had found no threat of violence in Little Rock and had not requested the intervention of Governor Faubus and his state troops were:

(1) The mayor of Little Rock.

(2) The chairman of the Little Rock School Board.

(3) The superintendent of the Little Rock Schools.

(4) The principal of Central High School.

(5) The chief of Police of Little Rock.

These are the public officials who were directly charged with carrying out a gradual plan of integration voluntarily evolved by the elected representatives of this community. These are the public officials who were charged with proceeding with their plan by the highest judicial authority in the land—after the National Association For the Advancement of Colored People went to law to protest that the program was too gradual. These are responsible men, deeply rooted in this community, who had tried to do their duty as they saw it.

These are responsible public officials of Little Rock who believed —and so testified under oath—that they could have resolved a difficult social problem in good order and with good will had not Orval E. Faubus refused their pleas for support and instead embarked upon a course that invited violence and disorder.

Carefully screened witnesses, Mr. Faubus said. Who else should have been called upon except those who live here, who have wrestled with the problem for more than four years, and who bear the final responsibility for the conduct of local affairs?

The truth is that the testimony before Judge Davies was in effect screened by Mr. Faubus himself—who ordered his attorneys to walk out of court before they were called upon to introduce the evidence of possible violence Mr. Faubus still says he has, but has refused to divulge.

This could have been, as we have said, Mr. Faubus' day in court. It was his opportunity to display for his own people, and for the world to see the evidence of impending disaster which he has repeatedly said prompted him to call out the National Guard to thwart the orders of the federal court.

He did not do so. Nor did he choose to subject those who testified against him to cross-examination. Instead he apparently has fallen back on the legalisms of states versus federal rights and has launched upon a course of court appeal—which, of course, is his right.

But in the meantime he has called off his troops and apparently washed his hands of any responsibility for upholding the law, which at intervals and even in his broadcast last night he still says he accepts. As usual Mr. Faubus has not made it clear whether his State Police will support local authorities in case of trouble—the simple act of duty he refused to agree to undertake in the long negotiations through which the White House patiently sought a settlement out of court.

Mr. Faubus last night for the first time fell back on the final defense of the demagogue. He sought to divert attention for his own role by charging that he is the victim of an evil conspiracy.

The truth is that there is only one issue:

Orval Faubus versus the law of the land.

September 23, 1957

The Conscience Of This Community

At Second Presbyterian Church yesterday the Reverend Marion A. Boggs offered a special prayer:

"We pray that all persons in authority be given wisdom, and we ask God to restrain the passions of violent men. We pray that we will not suffer the spirit of lawlessness to gain ascendancy in our community, and that all persons have the patience to wait the due process of law."

These solemn words had their echo in many other Little Rock churches yesterday. They bespeak the heart of the community.

And they have a special meaning for the public officials and peace officers who this morning may be called upon to perform a hard duty.

They speak for the great silent, mass of our people who abhor violence, respect the law, and would be ashamed for any child of any race to look upon the naked face of hatred.

Mayor Mann, the Public School authorities, and the peace officers on duty at Central High School are upholding not only the law but the true conscience of this community. We salute them.

Now We Face Federal Troops

The march of events in Little Rock over the last three weeks has now led to an inevitable climax.

Yesterday President Eisenhower made the hard and bitter decision he has sought to avoid. He will use federal troops to restore law and order to the City of Little Rock.

The president's language made his meaning unmistakable. To the White House reporters at Newport he read a statement in the numbered paragraphs of the old military man:

"I want to make several things very clear in connection with the disgraceful occurrences of today at Central High School in the city of Little Rock.

"1. The federal law and orders of a United States District Court implementing that law cannot be flouted with impunity by an individual or any mob of extremists.

"2. I will use the full power of the United States — including whatever force may be necessary to prevent any obstruction of the law and to carry out the orders of the federal court."

We can hope that we may yet escape the tragic spectacle of federal soldiers deployed on the streets of Little Rock for the first time since the post-Civil War period of Reconstruction.

The decision is up to the members of the riotous mob which assembled yesterday at Central High School and finally passed beyond the control of the local police—who did their duty and did it well.

If these reckless men force the issue again this morning the federal troops will march—as they must march to restore order and end the intolerable situation in which this city now finds itself.

The High Price Of Recklessness

This is a tragic day in the history of the republic—and Little Rock, Arkansas, is the scene of the tragedy.

In one sense we rolled back our history to the Reconstruction era when federal troops moved into position at Central High School to uphold the law and preserve the peace.

Yet there was no denying the case President Eisenhower made in solemn words on television last night.

Law and order had broken down here.

The local police could not restore the peace with their own resources.

Governor Faubus had refused to use his state forces to enforce the law, and instead had used them to defy the order of a federal court—and in so doing had made this last, painful step inevitable.

And so the reckless course the governor embarked upon three weeks ago has raised old ghosts and tested the very fiber of the constitution. And, the greatest irony of all, he has by his acts and words dealt a major and perhaps a lethal blow to the cause of segregation which he purported to uphold.

We in Little Rock had perfected a plan to meet the Supreme Court's new racial requirements in education gradually and largely on our own terms. The federal courts had sustained us. But now Mr. Faubus and the angry, violent and thoughtless band of agitators who rallied to his call may well have undone the patient work of responsible local officials.

We can still hope that this will not be the case. Unhappy though it may be, the action of the president in using federal force will serve to restore the calm that is essential to an orderly approach to any problem. In the days ahead we as a people will, we believe, regain our perspective and accept the clear course of duty.

That is the job for all of us now—to restore the peace and sustain the law.

'Who Will Build Arkansas . . .'

Who will build Arkansas if her own people do not?

The floodlighted billboard legend stood out in Gazette Chief Photographer Larry Obsitnik's dramatic night shot of federal troops moving across the Broadway Bridge toward Central High school.

There were no state or community builders in the crowd that had provoked this humiliation for the law-abiding majority of Little Rock citizens. Among the adults in the mob that had thronged around the high school for a number of days, there were no leaders of the established business community, no philanthropists or sustained supporters of worthy civic causes. Many of the crowd, by no means all of them from out-of-town, were forced to ask directions to the School — a circumstance which gave some indication of their prior interest in educational matters. These were not builders, but wreckers.

Among the teen-agers who joined the mob, there were no Student Body officers, no members of Honor Societies, no campus leaders of any kind. There were some who had not bothered to complete the high school advantages that had been offered to them, but who at the prospect of violence had suddenly become mortally concerned with the state of education in Little Rock Central High.

"Who will build Arkansas if her own people do not?"

Fortunately, the mobs in front of Central High School have at no time been in any sense representative of the people of Arkansas.

The Case For Orval E. Faubus

Governor Faubus added very little to his own case in his television address last night. He simply reiterated the position that he has taken from the beginning—that school integration is possible at Little Rock if only it had been conducted on a time schedule devised privately by the governor and never yet revealed to the public school officials charged by a federal court with admitting nine Negro students at this term.

The governor, indeed, sounded very much like an integrationist himself — particularly when he once again went out of his way to point out that his own son is now attending a state college which has been integrated with his support and approval.

The only significance of this latest exercise in double-talk lies in what the governor did not say.

Mr. Faubus, for example, claimed that all of this city's present troubles stem from the imprudent actions of an "imported" federal judge.

What he did not say is that the Little Rock School Board is proceeding under the original order of Judge John Miller, whose roots are as deep in the Arkansas soil as are Mr. Faubus'. All the "imported" judge from North Dakota has done is direct Mr. Faubus not to interfere with the action of Judge Miller—and who could believe that any federal judge, whatever his background, would have done anything else?

The governor also charged that a group of local conspirators—including the executive editor of this newspaper—were largely responsible for the decision of the president of the United States and his administration to send federal troops to Little Rock to restore peace and order.

What the governor did not say is that the Arkansas Gazette is one of the last remaining Democratic newspapers in the country. Nor did he add the obviously pertinent information that the executive editor of the Gazette, on leave from his newspaper duties, spent more than 10 months of the 1955-1956 campaign year trying to defeat President Dwight D. Eisenhower and elect Adlai Stevenson—the candidate Mr. Faubus, incidentally, also supported.

It is, of course, human nature to try to find someone to blame for our troubles. All we can say is that in his hour of desperation, Mr. Faubus, who obviously has more than his share in the wake of his reckless actions of the last three weeks, has nominated some unlikely candidates.

This newspaper deplores the presence of federal troops on the streets of Little Rock far more strongly than Mr. Faubus did in his speech last night.

And the truth the governor is now using the demagogue's tools to obscure is that this newspaper has drawn Mr. Faubus' unprincipled and unfounded condemnation not so much because it has criticized his actions but because from the beginning of this fiasco it has told him and his frenetic followers the simple and terrible truth—that if Mr. Faubus persisted in his course of naked defiance of the law of the United States there could be only one end result—and all of us would suffer under it.

The day Orval Faubus put armed and uniformed men around Central High School under his personal order to nullify the order of a United States District Court he invited a show of federal force. When he refused to accept the conciliatory gestures of a mild and patient president he made such a show certain. Now we have it.

What End Results In Other States?

Before any final action is taken in the matter of calling a special session of the legislature Governor Faubus and his advisors should amass a detailed report on what has actually been accomplished by the segregation legislation which has been enacted in other Southern states, in much the same atmosphere in which a meeting of the Arkansas General Assembly would be held at this time.

Many members would no doubt welcome the opportunity to go on record with expressions of their views and statements of their positions. But they should ask themselves just what could be achieved in the light of experience elsewhere in the South.

We don't think there is any use to talk about abolishing public schools. As a matter of fact the Arkansas Constitution provides that:

> Intelligence and virtue being the safeguards of liberty and the bulwarks of a free and good government, the state shall ever maintain a general, suitable and efficient system of free schools, whereby all persons in the state between the ages of six and 21 years may receive gratuitous instruction.

We must also seriously doubt the constitutionality of severely penalizing schools that integrate, especially if they integrate under orders of the courts.

We believe these considerations should appeal to the calm and considered judgment of Governor Faubus, of members of the General Assembly and the public as a whole.

Governor Faubus And the Record

It seems unlikely that the rest of the country was too much interested in the primitive campaign techniques Governor Faubus brought to a national TV network Thursday night, or in the governor's private, local feuds, for that matter.

However, the American Broadcasting Company did a real public service in bringing even that tragic spectacle before a national audience. The mere fact that Governor Faubus was being permitted to speak his piece in such fashion was enough to dissipate the notion he sought to peddle that Little Rock was anything like Budapest under the Communists or Paris under the Nazis. To complete the analogy the governor would have had to be broadcasting by clandestine shortwave transmitter in the fashion of the French FFI or the Hungarian partisans.

As it was, the Arkansas governor was given full rein for his calculated distortion of the facts in the Little Rock School integration case. Because it said nothing new, Mr. Faubus' TV pitch was, perforce, much more notable for what it didn't say than what it did say.

In holding up newspaper photographs which he said would demonstrate that federal bayonets were harassing white students and innocent white adults, Mr. Faubus was careful not to hold up the earlier photographs of a Negro newspaperman being kicked in the face by a member of the white mob, or the still earlier one of the duly-qualified Negro girl being threatened by the same white mob while Governor Faubus' state guardsmen looked the other way.

At one point in the Thursday night broadcast Mr. Faubus looked up in pain to ask imploringly:

> Must the will of the majority now yield, under federal force, to the will of the minority, regardless of the consequences?

He did not mention that the Arkansas National Guard had been used to thwart the will of the 2-to-1 majority of the electors of the Little Rock School District, as expressed less than six months before the court-ordered opening of schools under a plan of gradual integration. The governor's action was, by his own version, taken as a result of the threats, not mere opinion, of a small minority of the people. It is reasonably clear by now that the governor's action was taken "regardless of the consequences."

The Power Of The Presidency

President Eisenhower cannot afford to get into any running argument with Orval Faubus or any of the other Southern political leaders whom the Arkansas governor has dragged out on the limb with him.

However, some of the things Mr. Eisenhower has already said badly needed saying.

As to the "Hitler" example, which both Governor Faubus and Senator Russell of Georgia had been unwise enough to allege against Hitler's conquerer, the president said with some understandable asperity:

> "I must say that I completely fail to comprehend your comparison of our troops to Hitler's Storm Troopers. In one case, military power was used to further the ambitions and purposes of a ruthless dictator; in the other, to preserve the institutions of free government. * * * When a state, by seeking to frustrate the order of a federal court, encourages mobs of extremists to flout the orders of a federal court, and when a state refuses to utilize its police powers to protect against mobs persons who are peaceably exercising their right under the Constitution, as defined in such court orders, the oath of office of the president requires that he take action to give the protection. Failure to act in such a case would be tantamount to acquiescence in anarchy and dissolution of the Union."

It cannot be said often enough in this tragic situation that the individual states, so far, have lost no "right" that they possessed before President Eisenhower moved federal troops into Little Rock and removed the Arkansas state guard from Governor Faubus's control. It is quite true, as Mr. Faubus says, that next day or next year, the federal government might have to move in similarly direct fashion in a Northern labor dispute. Indeed, it already has.

What Mr. Faubus apparently did not realize until too late is that every president from Washington forward has lived with the knowledge that, if pressed, he had to assert the supremacy of the federal authority, as Washington did in Pennsylvania's so-called "Whiskey Rebellion." The result of that first test of the federal executive's resolution, the historians are agreed, was to strengthen the central government.

Only the relative infrequency of such similar tests as Governor Faubus's act of defiance has served to keep the federal government at such distance from direct control of state affairs as it still maintains. It has been often remarked that the United States, unlike Britain, operates from a written Constitution, "a government of laws—not men." However, even the United States must operate from a body of unwritten constitutional law: A governor does have the power to call out the state guard to preserve the peace, at his own instance and for his own reasons. However, it is understood that state governors will use that power wisely, as a president must learn to use his far greater power wisely.

It is this awareness of unwritten limitations that accounts for much of the genius of the American political system, as a far greater reliance on the unwritten law accounts for the genius of the English system that gave it birth.

A president may use his power, prayerfully, and reluctantly. (Mr. Eisenhower has told Senator Russell that few times in his life had he been as "saddened" as he was by the necessity to take such a step as the one he now has taken.) But use it he must when he is challenged head-on. The alternative, as Mr. Eisenhower has duly noted, would be "anarchy and dissolution of the Union."

'Delay' and Some Background Events

In saying that President Eisenhower first was disposed to grant "more time" to Governor Faubus, but was "overruled" by Attorney General Brownell, U. S. News & World Report has merely repeated what had been publicly stated earlier by the governor himself.

The two reports obviously come from a common source, Mr. Faubus, and there is no reason to doubt their accuracy.

The task which Mr. Brownell faced was to demonstrate to the president that the courts of proper jurisdiction already had disposed of the Arkansas governor's plea for "more time" and that there was nothing the executive on his own could do about it, even if he were so disposed.

The chronology of the background events that led inexorably to the stationing of federal troops around Central High School cannot be examined too often by anyone really desirous of getting at the facts.

From that detailed chronology, two dates, almost exactly a year apart, stand out in glaring contrast.

On August 28, 1956, the NAACP served notice of appeal from the United States District Court's decision upholding the Little Rock School Board's plan to begin limited integration of Central High School in September of the following year, 1957. There was at the same time no protest or notice of appeal in the other direction from any group which felt that the School Board's plan was too hasty, rather than too slow, as the NAACP had alleged in filing its appeal.

It was not until August 27 of this year, just one week before the scheduled entry of nine Negro students into Central High School, that the Mothers' League got into court or, indeed, had even been formed.

Governor Faubus has said repeatedly that he was not seeking to prevent integration at Little Rock; only to delay it until a time when the decision to go ahead would be his rather than the School Board's or the United States courts'.

The Central High mothers who do not belong to the Mothers' League, which is to say, the great majority, might fairly ask the militant League organizers where they were during the year since the Little Rock plan had been upheld by the federal District Court or even since last April, when it was upheld on appeal in the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals.

The War of Nerves In Little Rock

Yesterday some of the leading citizens of Little Rock spoke out on behalf of law and order. They were, we believe, giving voice to the views of the vast, silent majority.

And there is, of course, a reason why the majority heretofore has been silent.

This city has been subjected to what can only be called a war of nerves.

A small, determined and militant minority, aided and abetted by the extreme posture of Governor Faubus, has set itself up as the voice of the community. And anyone who has dared to dissent from its violent views has been subjected to overt and covert threats of reprisal.

The weapons are the familiar ones—the threat of boycott against those who are in business, the threat of personal violence against those who are not.

The record shows how empty the threats really are. Perhaps the most remarkable single fact in this whole tragic episode is that there has been no real inter-racial violence—and that all of us, white and colored, have continued to go about our normal business without rancor even with troops in the streets.

But the threats serve their purpose. Any man is shaken by an anonymous telephone call threatening him or his family with bodily injury or economic destruction. And when the anonymous calls are multiplied by what is an obviously well-organized conspiracy they can become deadly.

This is how many decent citizens of this community have been, for the most part, silenced and to their shame portrayed to the world as a people who are willing to use any resort, including violence, to defy an unpopular law.

It is, we know, hard for any of us to retain his perspective when the air is filled with rumors carefully designed not only to distort the truth, but to promote panic.

But we know, too, that we are a people who cannot be finally intimidated—a people who will not let a minority rule them by terror. We in Little Rock believe in law and order, and when we speak out for it again we shall have it.

October 4, 1957

Now Tell Us Who Are 'My People'

Governor Faubus dodged the basic question of whether he had reneged on the language of truce terms with the White House when he said in his Wednesday press conference:

> "They want me to take troops and put bayonets in the backs of the students of my state and bludgeon and bayonet my people."

Nobody, of course, wants the governor to do anything of the kind, but it would be interesting if he would attempt to identify "my people."

The mob at Central High School never numbered more than 1,000 persons at the largest, many of them the idle curious and others drawn not only from the corners of the state, but from out-of-state as well. Does "my people" include the unemployed salesman who came more than 200 miles, from Springdale, to help superintend the affairs of the Little Rock School District? Or does "my people" include the more than 100,000 people of Little Rock who have never been in the crowd in front of Central High School at any time?

And who are the "students of my state" for whose safety from bayonetting the governor professes to be so mightily fearful. Are these the fewer than 75 students who rashly walked away yesterday morning from their opportunity for a free public education?

Does the governor's select company include the youngster who boasted Wednesday that he was engaged in a conspiracy to physically harass the Negro students in defiance of a federal court order? Or should we—and the governor—be more concerned about the more than 1,500 students who by their conduct throughout the mess created by their elders have continued to demonstrate that they, at least, have read their civics texts?

Damage to The Industrial Program

Winthrop Rockefeller, who has devoted much time and money to the program of the Arkansas Industrial Development Commission, said bluntly in a national television broadcast that the program has been badly damaged by the integration crisis at Little Rock.

No one who has seen the headlines, or read the editorials in the nation's press over these past weeks could question the accuracy of his statement.

We know, and doubtless many people outside Arkansas understand, that the news of violence has been made by a tiny handful of our people.

But we also know that these headlines are the direct result of the negative posture of Governor Faubus—who so far has declined to offer adequate assurances that the law will be upheld and carried out.

And so, in that very important sense, we cannot complain that the picture of Little Rock and Arkansas has been distorted.

It is here, in this area of law and order, that the industrial development program can be most harmed. Most of the corporations considering locating plants here have no particular concern with the matter of integration or segregation in public education. What they are concerned with are guarantees against disorder, and at the moment they are without assurance that the state of Arkansas will preserve the peace if a handful of citizens decide to defy a law they don't like.

As Mr. Rockefeller says, it will probably take six months to appraise the damage. Moreover, we share his hope that the damage can be undone, and that the nation can once again look upon the true face of our people instead of the distorted image displayed to them in recent weeks.

But that, of course, depends upon Mr. Faubus. The tide will turn when the governor is willing to state as his own conviction the essence of Mr. Rockefeller's statement on television:

"I believe first and foremost in the Constitution of the United States and the law and order which it establishes. It is that law and order which gives the United States a position of leadership in the troubled world of today. When constitutional government was challenged in World War II, we all rose to defend it * * * and I spent six years in the service during that war.

"I respect the people of Arkansas and have faith in their good will and moderation. I am proud to be one of them. I firmly believe that this spirit of good will and moderation is beginning to assert itself and Arkansas will once again go forward.

"There comes a time when every citizen of the state and country who believes in the American Constitution must subordinate individual feelings to the common good and unity of the country. And that time is here now."

October 9, 1957

In the Skies and On the Streets

If we had to apply one word to the events that have wracked this town for the past month we would choose "improbable."

And somehow the improbability of the federal troops around Central High School has been increased by the not entirely unrelated appearance in the night skies of a Russian-built satellite which bemuses the ham operators of Arkansas with its reiterated "beep-beep-beep-beep."

The federal troops at Central symbolize many things—but most of all they symbolize the fact that Arkansas (and the South) has a problem of race relations that our best efforts over almost a century have failed to solve.

That symbol is a prime asset to the Russians, and they are using it everywhere in the world where people of color hold the balance of political power.

Along with it, the Russians now have another frightening symbol in the basketball-sized gadget whirring around the earth some 400-odd miles above its surface. The satellite means many things too—but most of it all it means that the Soviet scientists have proved their claim to perfecting an intercontinental ballistic missile. What they can send up into outer space, as our scientists have soberly recognized, they will soon be able to bring down again, with a warhead attached.

So the Russians are winning, for the moment at least, on two essential fronts. They have outstripped us in the armaments race that has preserved the peace under a balance of power since the advent of the atomic age. And they have moved far ahead of us in the concurrent struggle to control the minds of men.

There wasn't much we here in Little Rock could have done about the armament race. We have no satellite factory, and few interplanetary scientists are domiciled among us.

But there was much we could have done on the other front—had Orval Faubus done his duty and contained the mob instead of encouraging it. And there is much we can still do if we can, by our own efforts, restore the peace and present to the world once again the face of decency that is really ours.

But we'll need the governor's help, and we don't seem likely to get it so long as he is bent on spreading unverified horror stories in an apparent conscious effort to keep the passions of the moment ahead of the restraining truth.

Mr. Faubus Is Where He Was

Governor Faubus said at his press conference yesterday that the Little Rock crisis now hinges upon the withdrawal of the nine Negro children who are presently peacefully attending Central High School under federal court order and federal military protection.

This, of course, is one answer.

It happens to be the answer the Citizens Councils have been offering ever since the United States Supreme Court ruled that Negroes could no longer be barred from any school solely on the basis of race. If the Negroes voluntarily choose not to attend white schools then there is no problem. And if they do not voluntarily so choose, but can be coerced or intimidated into withdrawing, there is no problem.

But the federal government has said that these nine children cannot be so coerced or intimidated, and has used the full weight of both the judicial and executive departments to guarantee that they shall not be.

So what Mr. Faubus is saying is that the federal government must abandon its position and let him have his way on his own terms. There is no indication that the federal government will do so.

So we are back where we started when the governor called out the National Guard before school opened to defy an order of the federal court. Mr. Faubus has refused to abandon the position he took then in the face of repeated efforts at compromise and conciliation. And now he is attempting to sustain his posture of defiance by peddling dubious rumors of misconduct by the federal forces his own actions brought to Little Rock.

But still, with all this, the governor contends that all he wants is delay. He says that Negroes cannot attend Central High School peaceably now, but he suggests that they can at some indefinite future date. At one point or another he has suggested that this might be possible next semester, or next fall—the last date being, in our judgment, the significant one since it comes after the next gubernatorial election.

But what the governor never explains is why he thinks it will be any easier to carry out the court order then than it was this time around—or any easier, that is, than it would have been had he not recklessly chosen to disrupt the patient and careful work of the responsible local school officials who had every reason to believe that their limited and gradual plan was acceptable to a vast majority of the people.

Could the governor guarantee that no mob would form next semester, or next fall, if the Negro children again presented themselves under court order? He probably could, as a matter of fact, but he has repeatedly indicated that he will not do so—as indeed he cannot do without sacrificing the temporary political advantages he has gained. And so there is no valid reason to assume that delay will resolve the impasse which Mr. Faubus has made.

The point which the governor consciously seeks to obscure is that the order of the United States Court still stands, the means for enforcing it are available, and the federal government has demonstrated for all to see that it will use those means if necessary.

We doubt that Mr. Faubus can simply wear the federals out—although he is doing a pretty good job of wearing out his own people.

October 20, 1957

The Moderates vs. The Extremists

In the emotional atmosphere of these last few weeks, some important words have lost their real meaning.

There are those, for example, who attempt to reduce the Little Rock school impasse to a conflict between "segregationists" and "integrationists."

We only wish the matter were that simple.

If "segregationist" means one who would prefer to keep the white and colored races separate in all things social the term would embrace practically all the white population of Arkansas and a substantial portion of the black.

If "integrationist" means one who believes all the legal and extralegal barriers between the races should be dropped overnight it would apply to only a small minority of the colored population.

The truth, deliberately obscured by those who have been loudest in arguing the case, is that neither of these concepts is or was really at issue at Central High School.

For example, the members of the Little Rock School Board, would without exception qualify as segregationists. Indeed, they felt (as do we) that they were working to preserve the existing pattern of social segregation when they evolved a plan which would, in compliance with the new federal law, result in the admission of only a few, carefully screened Negro students to a single white high school.

Yet these conscientious men are now under attack as "integrationists"—as is this newspaper for its consistent support of their position.

Perhaps the only terms that now have any real validity are "extremist" and "moderate." An extremist is one who would defy the law and use force if necessary to prevent the entry of Negroes to any school heretofore reserved for whites. A "moderate" is one who will obey the law, no matter how distasteful it may be to him personally—and who under no circumstances will condone violence against any person for any reason.

If we divide the population of the state on this basis—as ultimately we will have to do—we believe the extremists would account for only a small minority.

The problem of the moment is that they have at least the tacit support of a fairly substantial number of citizens who are still bemused by the false fear and the false hope that have beset the South for the last century—and there are demagogues abroad in the land who are deliberately playing one against the other.

The false fear is that the striking down of the legal barriers of segregation and the rising aspirations of our Negro people will bring about a vast and sudden social change in the South. Our own experience should prove to anyone who will consider the facts that this is not even a remote possibility—that the barriers of the mind have never needed to be sustained by the strictures of the law. Does anyone who has considered the matter dispassionately believe that the casual proximity of a few Negroes and a few whites in our classrooms is going to change the social pattern we have always lived by? If so, we invite an examination of the record of our state university and colleges which began desegregation some eight years ago.

The false hope is that the rest of the United States, by persuasion or force, can be brought to abandon the declared public policy of the nation and let the South alone. The presence on our streets of a detachment of the 101st Airborne Infantry, ordered here by the most conciliatory president in modern times, should disabuse us of that notion.

The point is that sooner or later we have got to make some adjustment of our legal institutions to comply with the public policy of the United States—or once again secede from the Union, which no one seriously contemplates. We were given a chance to make those adjustments largely on our own terms; we lost it the day the extremists took over and persuaded Governor Faubus to embark upon a course of defiance of federal authority. But there is still a chance to regain it—if, in time, we also regain our perspective and begin behaving like the moderates most of us really are.

Governor Faubus Mounts the Stump

Governor Faubus' speech to the county judges the other night can only be regarded as the formal announcement of his campaign for a third term as governor—the campaign for which he has been callously laying the groundwork in the recent weeks of school crisis in Little Rock.

Back on familiar ground and uninhibited by the peering lenses of national television cameras, the governor aimed his pitch straight to the homefolks. It was an address distinguished by some remarkable untruths.

He took off, first of all, from a garbled version of a speech made by the publisher of the Gazette—conceding that the publisher may well have been misquoted but going on nevertheless to read the version published by the opposition Arkansas Democrat in its entirety and interpreting it for his own ends.

This was a preliminary to discounting any fact the Gazette has published about Mr. Faubus' conduct, or may print—the oldest tool of the demagogue. The governor charged that the Gazette had "misrepresented, slanted, distorted and colored the news in reference to me and the Little Rock situation." The fact is that the Gazette has printed in its entirety the text of every important speech, press conference, or public statement Mr. Faubus has made since the beginning of the controversy with the federal courts. Indeed, the chances are that if the governor himself wants to find out what he actually said on some of these occasions he will have to consult the files of the Gazette, which is the only complete source of record in existence.

The governor also came up with another one of those remarkable private pieces of information, source unidentified, which he delights in dropping into the political pot when it shows signs of simmering down. This one had to do with an alleged plot by the publisher of the Gazette to plant a psychiatrist at one of the governor's press conferences and have him write his findings "in the form of a news release to be used by this paper." The plan, the governor alleged, didn't come to full flower — although he didn't say why.

The reason, of course, is that there never was any such plot. Although a few of our readers have suggested in letters to the editor that Mr. Faubus may be suffering from some aberrations, this newspaper has never been that charitable in its own view.

We believe Mr. Faubus knows exactly what he is doing—and we suspect we have earned his wrath because through accurately reporting his devious course step by step, we have shown precisely where he is taking the people of his state in the furtherance of his political ambitions, and the terrible price all of us are going to have to pay as a result.

PROFESSIONAL STANDARDS COMMITTEE

of the

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS OFFICIALS

Report of the Committee, November 20, 1957

The Committee recognizes the fact that membership in NAIRO is not limited to professional workers in the field of intergroup relations. The Committee's responsibilities relate to professional standing and not to criteria for NAIRO membership.

The Committee believes that the first step in developing professional standards is to determine which workers in the broad area of human relations are to be designated "intergroup relations workers." This report proposes an answer to that question and comment on some related matters.

The following statement was prepared during six meetings of the Committee in New York and a great deal of correspondence. This statement is a consensus of the Committee. The members of the Committee seek its further improvement and no one is committed to this wording, nor to any particular concepts, despite the very considerable agreement at which the most active members of the Committee have arrived.

It is hoped that the deliberations at the Annual Meeting of NAIRO and at subsequent sessions of the Professional Standards Committee will produce an improved statement which NAIRO will adopt a year hence indicating the accepted views of its membership on these basic matters. This draft statement is to be revised by the Committee in the light of the views expressed at the 1957 meeting of NAIRO.

STATEMENT SUBMITTED FOR NAIRO'S CONSIDERATION

I. The Criteria of Professionalism: Flexner? Flexner?

The commonly accepted criteria of professionalism are (according to Professor Nathan E. Cohen):

1. Does the profession have a well-defined function, the nature and scope of which can be identified?

2. Does the profession have a philosophy, code of e thics, and other means of self-regulation which assure that its practice transcends the bounds of political, sectarian, and economic self-interest?

3. Does the profession have a unified pattern of organizations that can speak for it with one voice?

4. Does the community recognize the field as a profession? ~~compensation received by the professional practitioner indicate that the public is willing to pay him as a skilled and responsible professional worker?~~

5. Is the practice of the profession limited, or tending to be limited, to persons with approved general and professional preparation?

6. Body of transferable knowledge?

"Few professions," said Dr. Cohen, "meet all these criteria. The profession of social work, for instance, meets fully only a few of them."

However, the very first requirement for professionalization is agreement among those who assert that they are members of a certain profession, on the function, nature and scope of their profession.

II. Defining "Intergroup Relations Worker"

The intergroup relations worker is one whose principal professional concern is with racial, religious, ethnic, cultural and class differences within the social process, with the object that the total process will result in greatest utilization of the individuals' talents and skills and in the enjoyment of maximum dignity and equality.

III. Relationship to Employing Agencies:

The Committee recognizes the fact that since this is a new profession, it is necessary to recruit workers whose training has been obtained in kindred fields. It is likewise aware of the tendency to define an intergroup relations professional as someone who works for an intergroup relations agency. The Committee recognizes, however, the desirability of making it increasingly possible for young people to choose intergroup relations work reasonably early in their training. Professional workers should become so skilled in intergroup relations work that recognition of the competence of the individual will be secured on a more genuinely professional basis than employment in a particular type of agency.

The fact that there are generalists and specialists, administrators and field workers, researchers and practitioners, publicists and other categories of professional intergroup relations workers, has created great difficulties in setting up training programs and in determining professional standards. The fact that some intergroup relations agencies engage in programs that differ from programs of other agencies, adds to the difficulties of producing professional standards and training programs. If we agree upon a well defined conception of intergroup relations work, we shall have much less difficulty in deciding what is the common core of knowledge and what are the specialized branches of knowledge encompassed properly in "intergroup relations."

IV. Sources of Intergroup Relations Skills:

The field of intergroup relations has been greatly dependent upon other disciplines, especially in the areas of social science. Social work, public relations, law, education and psychology have contributed skills and techniques. The field of intergroup relations does not depend, however, upon any single discipline. Intergroup relations workers select from other disciplines and from various fields of knowledge whatever is useful to them. There is, however, a growing body of knowledge which has been developed by workers in the field of intergroup relations workers which is distinctive to this field and which has grown out of their activities in solving intergroup relations problems.

While the intergroup relations worker draws knowledge from various disciplines, as well as from the knowledge peculiar to his own profession, he needs to develop perceptions and expertness in applying this knowledge to the problems and projects of his own work. The personal attributes needed for expertness in professional intergroup relations work should be analyzed and described, since the personality of the worker has considerable bearing on his ability to handle conflict situations. We shall likewise need, in developing professional standards, to consider such matters as areas of knowledge, commitment to intergroup relations ideals and other factors which determine competence. Considerable study will be needed before standards in these matters can be determined.

V. The Role of the Professional Worker:

Non-professional intergroup relations workers are needed in great numbers for tasks wherein persons occupying positions in practically every field of human endeavor can make valuable contributions. This fact has been recognized by NAIRO in opening its membership to persons who do not consider themselves professional intergroup relations workers but who render service on the boards of intergroup relations agencies.

Where the question of what constitutes the profession of intergroup relations arises, it is not possible to include everyone who participates projects or programs related to the improvement of group relations. The professional worker in this field is one who devotes a major part of his time and effort to intergroup relations work and who relates each incident to its causes and recognizes its broader implications. He judges each development on the basis not only of its immediate effect, but also on the basis of its ultimate effects in the larger social process. The professional worker is better able to draw upon the cumulative knowledge of his co-workers in this field. His involvement in intergroup relations work is a matter of personal commitment on his part and he should seek to add to the totality of intergroup relations knowledge.

VI. Certification:

It is currently not feasible to establish the fact that a person is qualified as a professional intergroup relations worker except his being, or his having been, employed by an intergroup relations agency, or by an institution which conducts a program patently in the field of intergroup relations. This situation cannot be deemed permanently satisfactory. It is proposed that NAIRO establish a system of certification.

The NAIRO certification committee would need a set of standards for judging membership applicants. Careful development and ample discussion would be needed before any professional would consent to such judgment by his peers, and this committee does not presume to say when NAIRO should inaugurate such a procedure. It does recommend that NAIRO now take steps in that direction, especially thru the consideration of those factors that constitute truly professional performance in this field. It is not too early to give serious thought to the various steps involved in establishing a system for NAIRO certification.

MEMORANDUM

TO: NAIRO Membership

FROM: NAIRO Committee on Legislation

SUBJECT: Legislative Reporting Service

The 1948 Conference recommended that there be established "a clearing house service on legislation to keep state and local organizations and members of NAIRO informed through regular reports on the status of proposed and enacted federal legislation and litigation affecting minority groups".

The implementation of this recommendation began early in January with the issue of ACRR Release No. 41 "Legislation, Litigation and Public Policy". This release reviewed in brief, critical events in the field of civil rights that had occurred during the preceding twelve months.

Our first report on state and federal legislation appeared in the January issue of REPORT. Subsequent to that time, each issue of REPORT carried information about proposed legislation and its disposition. In most cases, we used tabular form, although for certain issues, it was found desirable to offer the monthly report in narrative form; the choice of style was made on the basis of developments during the month. As you will recall, the August issue of REPORT contained an insert summarizing in tabular form all states' civil rights actions taken between January 1 and September 1. This summary affords ready reference material, with measures which passed differentiated by the use of bold type. It is our present plan to present a similar summary of federal civil rights legislation when Congress adjourns.

In addition to the regular monthly records carried in REPORT, we attempted to make other contributions to the agencies operating in the field. In both February and March we issued intermediate reports on civil rights legislation in the states. On March 14 and 24, ACRR Releases 42 and 43, "Evaluation of State FEPC: Experiences and Forecasts" were issued as an aid to legislative action. These releases were reported to have been widely used in state campaigns then in progress. At the passage of the Washington State FEP law, the first measure of its kind to achieve success, ACRR sent out a special release to all agencies interested in state FEPC legislation announcing the passage of the law and providing an analysis of it. As the states of New Mexico, Rhode Island and Oregon passed similar laws, we made analyses of these according to the rubric already established and provided them to the field on request.

A word about the mailing list we have used and our sources of information is in order. The mailing list in all but the special cases mentioned above consisted of the NAIRO membership, the 1300 race relations agencies in the country, various functional agencies in related fields, libraries and research centers, and interested individuals. Our sources of information included: (1) voluntary correspondents throughout the country; (2) legislative representatives of national intergroup agencies; (3) state legislative reference services; (4) the Public Administration Clearing House clipping service; (5) the minority and general press and other publications received by ACRR; and (6) Congressional Quarterly and the Congressional Record.

This, then, completes the review of our legislative reporting service. Some of the obvious questions are these: (1) Has our legislative reporting met the needs expressed at the 1948 conference; (2) What suggestions do you have for making the reporting more useful to the field; (3) Do you have any comments on the forms our reporting has taken; (4) What are your suggestions as to additional sources that might well be utilized; (5) Does once a month seem often enough for the legislative reports to reach the field; (6) Do you have any suggestions relative to the distribution of our legislative reports: are they reaching the right people; and (7) What other suggestions do you have relative to this program?

No word has yet been said about litigation. Earlier this year, some thought was given to reporting on litigation in some such systematic manner as that which we had developed regarding legislation, but the scope of such a project seemed clearly beyond the available sources at the time. Moreover, there is some question as to the selection of cases to be reported, sources of information and the practical uses for which our reports should be designed. In lieu of systematic reporting, we do follow cases of wide spread interest and describe them in the body of REPORT. Again, suggestion and advice for this phase of the program are invited.

THIRD NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON INTERGROUP RELATIONS

MEMORANDUM

TO: All Agency Meeting Chairmen, Vice-Chairmen, and Reporters

FROM: Conference Management

SUBJECT: Conduct of the Agency Meetings

General Information: The Agency Meetings will meet concurrently in two morning sessions, on Thursday and Friday, November 3 and 4. The Thursday session will last from 10:45 to 12:30, and the Friday session from 9:00 to 12 noon (the second session will be a continuation of the first, using the same agenda). A chairman, vice-chairman, and student-reporter have been asked to serve at each agency meeting.

At the General Session on Saturday morning, November 5, from 9:00 to 11:30, the chairmen of the four agency meetings will participate in a panel discussion on the topic: "Toward An Integrated Intergroup Relations Program for the United States." The panel will have Dr. Charles S. Johnson as Moderator, and the discussion will concern the role of the various types of agencies -- local private, local public, state private, and state public -- in the overall intergroup relations effort. Each chairman will represent his respective type of agency, and, for this reason, it is felt that he may wish to devote some time at his Friday session to a discussion of the role of his type of agency, in order that he may have the benefit of the thought of other agency executives.

Agenda: A tentative agenda has been prepared on the basis of preferences expressed on Program Questionnaire returns. This is designed to serve as a guide only and may be altered or augmented by the participants at the round table or by the chairman and vice-chairman, in consultation with one another before the Conference.

Agency Meeting Procedure: There is no clear-cut division of labor between the duties of chairman and vice-chairman, and they will be expected to divide responsibilities and to devise the exact procedure for their Agency Meeting. Two broad procedural goals should be borne in mind: (1) widespread participation, and (2) adequate opportunity for discussion; the exact details of the meeting will, however, be left to the chairman and vice-chairman, in consultation with one another.

Reporting on Sessions: In accordance with the successful procedure followed last year, a student-reporter and an ACRR staff member will be assigned to each agency meeting, and they will report to the chairman at the beginning of each session. The reporter will be a graduate student and will take conference-type notes under the direction or supervision of the chairman. The ACRR staff member will be responsible for all agency meeting materials, will stand ready to assist the chairman and vice-chairman in any way possible, and will, in addition, take supplementary notes on the proceedings.

At the close of the Thursday session, the student-reporter will write out a brief report (one or two pages in length) from his notes and will leave this at the Conference Registration Desk. From this report and from his own notes, the ACRR staff member assigned to the agency meeting will prepare a typewritten summary (four copies: one to chairman, one to vice-chairman, and two for files) of the first day's agency meeting proceedings. If possible, these summaries will be delivered to the chairman and vice-chairman before the Friday session.

At the close of the Friday session, the same procedure will be followed, the ACRR staff member preparing the typewritten summary (four copies: same distribution) from his notes and from the report of the student-reporter. The summaries of both sessions of the agency meeting will be delivered to the chairman on Friday evening, for his use at the Saturday morning panel discussion.

FOREWARD

When the Second Conference on Research in Intergroup Relations was being planned, it was the expectation of the Conference Planning Committee that arrangements could be made for publishing the full proceedings. Since this did not prove feasible, the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials has, with regret, been forced to restrict this volume to the eight papers presented at the Conference.

A generous grant from the Field Foundation made the Conference possible. The Committee on Education, Training and Research in Race Relations of the University of Chicago, as co-sponsors, made available services and accommodations which contributed greatly to the effectiveness of the program and the comfort of the people attending the sessions. Nine intergroup relations agencies with offices in Chicago joined NAIRO and the University's Committee in tendering a reception to Conference registrants on the first evening: the Illinois Division of the American Civil Liberties Union, the Chicago Chapter of the American Jewish Committee, the Chicago Council of the American Jewish Congress, the Chicago Executive Committee of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, the Chicago Resettlers Committee, the Council Against Discrimination of Greater Chicago, the Illinois Commission on Human Relations, the Chicago Chapter of the Japanese American Citizens League, and the Midwest Chinese American Civic Council. And, finally, the following NAIRO members donated the time and materials required to produce this publication: Alexander J. Allen, Louise P. Blackman, Marshall Bragdon, Maurice B. Fagan, William Gremley, Virginia Huebner, Charles Livermore, Herman H. Long, Myron Schwartz, and Beulah Whitby. To all of these NAIRO is very grateful.

AN ANALYSIS OF THE 1953 NAIRO CONFERENCE

Isidor Chein

The general title assigned to this session makes me feel like one of the proverbial blind men trying to determine the nature of an elephant, each from his limited vantage point. Even if I had not been an active participant at the 1953 NAIRO Conference, there was simply too much going on at the same time for me to hope to perceive the whole thing in proper perspective. I can only try to analyze the Conference from my own limited vantage point--or, less pretentiously, at least to react to it.

From this limited vantage point, it seems to me that the central concern of the Conference was with intergroup relations as a profession. The concern was not expressed in the form of everyone patting everyone else and himself on the back while soberly asserting, "We are a profession." Quite the contrary. While I could not detect any serious questioning of the premise that intergroup relations work ought to constitute a profession, the prevailing mood was one of sober stock-taking and questioning--and the willingness to engage in self-criticism was carried so far as to suggest that the best intergroup relations workers are likely to be recruited from such relatively remote fields as the law, journalism, and group work rather than from the ranks of those specifically trained for work in intergroup relations.

Mind you, one does not have to look to the readiness for self-criticism to find assurance that this concern with professionalization is not a mask for a desire to raise one's status by defining one's occupation as a profession. I do not really believe that such assurance is needed. I raise the issue to make a point. Lawyers, journalists, group workers, and social scientists already are professionals and do not need that the field of intergroup relations work be defined as a profession in order to achieve this "exalted" status. There is ample precedent for a variety of professionals joining together in common endeavor without thereby creating a new profession.

If there is concern with the professionalization of intergroup relations work, it is what psychologists describe as a task-oriented rather than ego-oriented concern. There is a strong feeling that the needs of the field are such as to require the emergence of a profession rather than the continued collaboration of a variety of professionals, each retaining his original professional identity. Indeed, it is noteworthy how many of the workers in this field think of themselves as former journalists, former lawyers, or former what-nots, but now intergroup relations workers.

Myself, I tend strongly to sympathize with this feeling, but I am not 100 per cent sure that it is justified--and when I am in doubt about something, I tend to wonder whether there is anything that research can do to clarify the situation.

I have already argued at the 1953 Conference that "intergroup relations" as commonly understood[1] conforms to practical rather than to theoretical requirements. I went further and suggested that there cannot be a satisfactory theory of intergroup relations for a field so defined, but that sound theory must derive from a field which includes not merely what we here call "intergroup relations" but also such diverse phenomena as international relations, industrial and labor-management relations, domestic relations, the techniques of conference procedures, and the dynamics of small face-to-face groups. Nor, as I maintained, can the broader field afford to place its accent on the negative aspects of intergroup relations--i.e., on conflict, tension, and deprivation--but it must place equal emphasis on such positive manifestations as cooperation, mutual assistance, interstimulation, mutual enrichment and inter-change. My point was that "intergroup relations" as we here understand it is an artificial and rather unsagacious subdivision of this larger field. As it developed, the ineffectual struggle at one of the Conference sessions to find a more suitable designation for our field than "intergroup relations" gave point to my thesis. While something could be said on strategic grounds for each of several alternatives, it was readily apparent that every one of the alternatives included both too much and too little.

Such a state of affairs is, however, not necessarily deadly to an emerging profession of intergroup relations. What is required is that the new profession maintain its roots in, or at least active contact with, the larger field as well as with those fields in which the needed operational skills are likely to be most highly developed.

This, it seems to me, is a basic requirement of any profession. No profession can survive as such in a state of splendid isolation; it will quickly degenerate into a special variety of witchcraft. But frequent feeding at a common trough (if you will forgive the figure of speech) is not sufficient to establish a profession, no more than is mere communality of interest. Indeed, one may find a variety of professionals engaged in common enterprise, and looking to common sources for certain particularly relevant knowledges without thereby establishing a profession.

It seems to me that it takes at least one other ingredient to establish a profession--that is the transposability of personnel within the field and the relative inadequacy of not-specially-trained people from without. In every profession, there is some substrate of activity which, in principle if not in practice, every member of the profession is supposed to be equally competent to carry out. I fail to perceive such transposability in the field of intergroup relations work. I note, for instance, that not only are new workers likely to be taken on from outside the field, but that old ones, when they change positions, are as likely as not to leave the field or, if they remain in it, to find a position in an agency very similar to the one they have just left, where they carry on as though they had not changed jobs at all.

To me, these circumstances are very suspicious, and, to say the least, they require clarification. It may, of course, be that they reflect nothing more than the poor organization of employment channels. But it seems much more likely that there is as yet lacking a common set of minimum qualifications and basic transposability of personnel.

It is at this point that I believe research can be brought to bear to help to solve what I perceived to be the basic concern of the 1953 Conference. Obviously, I do not mean to suggest that this is the only, nor even the major, contribution that research can make to the field of intergroup relations. The field, in both its broader and narrower aspects, is literally permeated with problems toward the solution of which research activity can make significant contributions. I am limiting myself, however, to those research needs that I saw reflected at the Conference.

It seems to me that there is urgent need for a series of job analyses--detailed descriptions of what the workers in the field actually do on a day-to-day basis. Samples of workers should be drawn from every variety of intergroup relations agency--public and private, national and local, interracial and interfaith and inter-both, and with suitable attention to regional distribution; and detailed work-samples should then be analyzed.

Such a study would be reward enough in itself. At the very least, it would help to clarify training needs or to draw up sound specifications of qualifications for employment. But I have something more in mind. What I would like to see determined are the true dimensions of the field as it is at present constituted. Thus, I would like to know if there is a common core of activity in all of the agencies. I would not know how to assess the usual annual reports for this purpose even if I did not suspect that they are sometimes dressed up to create special effects; the agency activities are too likely to be described in terms of alleged outcomes, and, even when there is description of actual activity, the description is likely to be in terms too broad to enable any assessment of the degree to which the various activities call upon a core of common skills and knowledges. I would like to be able to determine whether there are systematic differences in the activities of the workers according to their professional origins. Similarly, whether the old-timers carry on differently from the newcomers; and, more specifically, whether the old-timer intergroup relations worker who originated in journalism resembles more in his actual operations the old-timer who started his professional life as a lawyer than he does the newcomer from journalism. Similarly, whether the differences between varieties of agencies are greater than the differences in workers' backgrounds or vice versa; or whether there is what the statistician would describe as significant interaction between variety of agency and variety of background.

There has been a great deal of attention given in past conferences and elsewhere to making explicit the working assumptions of the field of intergroup relations. As Charles Livermore has pointed out, however, in one of the working papers for the last Conference, "Some assumptions are basic to one role and others are basic to another, and I am not at all sure that there would be much general agreement among all professionals as to which were and which were not basic."[2] It was Livermore's hunch that the lines of differentiation with respect to assumptions followed the lines "of people who were playing somewhat equivalent roles . . . within somewhat similar types of agencies." He may be right, but it is conceivable to me that the lines of differentiation with respect to assumptions follow quite different lines such as the professional origins or identifications of the workers, their racial-religious-or-ethnic origins or identifications, the length of time they have been working in the field, or whether they receive financial compensation for their work in the field.

I think that the sheer examination of the activity distributions would throw a great deal of light on this issue. It would, however, be relatively easy to build a more detailed examination of the issue into the project I am proposing. The available lists of assumptions can be used as a guide in setting up check-lists or categories of activity, and the workers can be asked to evaluate their specific actions. Thus, for any given action, one can ask the worker to assess whether he perceives this action as significant intergroup relations activity or as a necessary diversion to build good will or assure support for the agency, and so on; or whether he believes there is a real function for his action or whether he takes it because some action is called for and he knows of nothing better to do.

I can see many obstacles in the way of carrying out such a project, but I am confident that if it actually were carried out, it would do more than clarify the professional status of the intergroup relations field. I think it would go to the root of many of the problems that lead intergroup relations workers to be concerned with the professional status of the field.

I should like to turn now to a minor--but, to me, significant--incident of the Minneapolis Conference. At one point, two social scientists disagreed quite vehemently. One expressed himself to the effect that he is coming quite strongly to believe that intergroup contact as such, regardless of the status relationships of the participants, makes for improved intergroup attitudes. The second dissented, pointed to intergroup relations in the South as providing clear-cut refutation of the expressed viewpoint, suggested that contact is a necessary condition of conflict as well as of amity, and concluded that, while the available evidence was far from consistent, if any conclusion is justified, it is that equal-status contact has a better prospect of making for favorable intergroup attitudes than any other potential influence we know.

By an interesting coincidence that may have something to do with the fact that I happen to be the second of the above-mentioned social scientists, I agree with the latter. At the same time, since I view my colleague with considerable respect, I could not, when I paused to review the incidents of the Conference, dismiss his unorthodox view as evidence of mental aberration. It set me to thinking, and, since it is the fundamental premise of my scientific credo that there is no scientific conclusion which is so sacred or so well established that it may not be challenged, I attempted to re-examine my position.

I shall not try to recapitulate the process, but will venture to indicate the nature of my reorientation. I still believe that, other conditions being equal, equality of status in the contact situation as a rule makes for a greater likelihood of improved attitudes, and that, in those conflict situations where the other conditions make for a deterioration in attitudes, equality of status is likely to make for less deterioration. Also, I am confident that my colleague will agree with me that, regardless of the impact on attitudes, there are other considerations that make it desirable to work for equality of status in intergroup contact situations.

Nevertheless, a dispassionate re-examination of the evidence clearly indicated that equality of status is neither a necessary nor a sufficient condition of improvement in attitudes as a consequence of contact. That it is not sufficient, I knew before. The contradictory findings that are reported in the research literature offer adequate testimony to that effect. That it is not necessary, however, became clear from ma instances I could think of, in which favorable attitude changes took pla in the context of unequal status contact. In my personal experiences and in the evolution of my own attitudes, for instance, I could think of many instances in which contact with students differing from myself in race, creed, and/or national origin had favorable consequences for my attitudes, I could think of several instances in which contact with cleaning ladies who came to our home had similar effects. I suddenly questioned whether several research reports--for instance, the classical study by Tredwell Smith[3]--which I had hitherto classified as evidence of the beneficial effects of equal status contact really involved equal status contact at all.

Why, then, do I not go the whole hog and agree with my colleague that it is contact per se that makes for favorable attitude change? Well, there is still the South, and the fact that contact may breed conflict as well as amity, and other facts too numerous to mention.

The point of citing this incident is that it highlights how little we know of the dynamics of contact situations and the nature of the effects. We do not know enough about the conditions under which equal status contacts make for dependable favorable attitude change, or about the conditions under which unequal status contacts may make for favorable attitude changes, or whether there is (as I now suspect) a common denominator to the conditions that make for favorable changes in equal and unequal contact situations.

Yet, so much of our effort is, quite properly, oriented to bringing about intergroup contact. It follows that here is an area that most urgently needs intensive exploration. It is almost a truism to say that the more we learn about what actually happens in contact situations, the more intelligently and effectively we can carry out our functions.

Need I add that, if this is true with respect to contact, it is at least as true for anything else we do?

This minor incident, then, may well serve as a preface to the present Conference.

AN ANALYSIS OF THE 1953 NAIRO CONFERENCE

John P. Dean

My purpose is to report on the NAIRO Conference at Minneapolis, Minnesota, on November 11-13, 1953. As I understood my assignment as an observer at that conference, it was to try to understand the activities of NAIRO practitioners as revealed in their participation in the Conference, to try to infer some of the assumptions underlying those activities and to appraise their research needs. That's a big order, especially if one has to depend on prowling around the Conference, eyes open, ear to the ground, pad and pencil in hand. Just to make it more difficult for us observers, the Conference was set up as a five-ring circus with simultaneous meetings going on in five separate places (one of which we were scheduled to participate in). The impressions, insights, and hunches (hypotheses would be too exacting a word) that emerge from even the most attentive perambulating can at best have limited value.

In an effort to be slightly more systematic, a brief one-page questionnaire schedule was prepared. The purpose was more to see if research on practitioners and their assumptions were feasible than to provide valid scientific data. All of the NAIRO audience at the general afternoon session on the first day of the Conference filled in the schedule; this yielded 110 schedules, about two-thirds of the total registrants at the Conference. Despite the limited scientific value of the results, they are suggestive and, I believe, worth reporting, because they indicate the kinds of findings that might be obtained from more extensive and well-planned research. The assumption that underlies this type of "action" research is that social scientist and practitioner alike can learn a great deal about action techniques and social change by formulating the accumulated wisdom and experience of effective practitioners. But if we are to have more than just the crudest rules of thumb, that wisdom must be formulated by careful scientific study. The brief findings reported here do not claim to be that, but they do indicate that scientific research of this type is entirely feasible.

At this stage of our knowledge, we appear to need a classification of intergroup relations practitioners into "types." Eventually, perhaps, we can speak more securely of the "relative effectiveness" of the various types for certain objectives that can be specified. At present we must be satisfied with a much cruder approach. In just thinking about the range of people that might be labelled at one time or another "intergroup practitioners," we realize that the blanket can be stretched to cover everyone from the worker in the local neighborhood house or public playground all the way to high-powered persons like Thurgood Marshall or even Eleanor Roosevelt. Every school teacher or personnel administrator with mixed groups under his supervision is in one sense an intergroup relations practitioner.

There are several ways we can approach a typological problem of this sort. One way is to let our imagination run free and see what attributes of role, status, and operating procedures cluster together to form impressionistic "types." Such types represent sort of rough stereotypic profiles. To have any meaning, observers in the field would have to agree that these "types" are frequently approximated by persons of their acquaintance. If we were to do this for the field of intergroup relations practitioners, there would be much difference of opinion, but I would hazard a guess that you could probably find some agreement that the following types (or something akin to them) could be recognized in the field:

The "Big Wheels": the persons of influence and status who have taken a stand on the side of better intergroup relations and have occasionally thrown their weight around to try to achieve intergroup objectives (e.g., Hubert Humphrey, Herbert Lehman).

The "Pressure Boys": the active lobbyists for intergroup objectives who know their way around and are skilled at applying the pressure where it will do the most good (e.g., Walter White, Lester Granger, Thurgood Marshall).

The "Intergroup Officials": persons with some official responsibility for an intergroup relations program. They probably should be subdivided into:[1]

The "Operators": administrators in strategic positions who are not only successful in keeping themselves and their programs functioning in a field situation but who also are effective in accomplishing significant intergroup relations objectives (e.g., effective executives of local mayor's commissions, state FEP commissions, etc.).

The "Conciliators": administrators who are just successful.

The "Professional Ethnics": persons who are employed by, and devoted to accomplishing the objectives of, an organization that is primarily oriented toward the betterment of the ethnic group that person belongs to (e.g., executive director of local Urban League, regional executive of Anti-Defamation League, etc.).

The "Motivated Periphery": persons whose main program objectives are not an intergroup relations program (at least not ostensibly so), but who, for personal reasons or because of the policy of their state or national affiliates, are motivated to work for better intergroup relations (e.g., an intergroup-relations-minded CIO executive, YWCA director, etc.).

The "Academic Fringe": persons in university work whose research or academic interests have motivated them to be more or less active in intergroup relations (but who are likely to see the problems more in terms of research and theory than action techniques).

However appealing such a typology as this at first appears, it leaves many clouded borderlines and is of little scientific use until terms are succinctly defined and actual classification made possible. This refinement is not beyond the realm of scientific possibility, but the typology helps us little in understanding the Minneapolis Conference, except to observe the almost complete absence of "big wheels" and "pressure boys," in the operating deliberations of the organization. This, of course, may be entirely appropriate in a "professional" organization.

Another way this problem of types can be approached is to take a look at the organizational affiliations of participants at practitioner conferences such as the Minneapolis Conference. NAIRO itself classifies members into departments on this basis: Local Public, State Public, Federal Public, National Private, Local and State Private, and Research. There is a certain rough correspondence between this classification and the typology above: the first three departments are "intergroup officials;" the private agencies are mostly "professional ethnics" and "motivated periphery," and the research department includes most of the "academic fringe." Two modifications of the departmental classification seem desirable before using it to analyze the practitioners at the Conference: (1) a group called auxiliary and miscellaneous (corresponding to the "motivated periphery") can be set up to include those practitioners with local private affiliations whose main objectives are not an intergroup relations program (YWCA directors, labor, clergymen, school teachers, etc.). This leaves in local and state private primarily "professional ethnics" associated with private organizations whose objectives are mainly intergroup relations. (2) It seems wise to distinguish those who are the "inner circle" of the organization from those who have a more tenuous or brief attachment. Most organizations have such an "inner circle" of steady supporters who contribute funds, put time in on committee work, attend meetings regularly, and carry on the main work of the organization. In the course of their association together, the "inner circle" is apt to exchange experiences over a period of years, disabuse each other of naive points of view and misconceptions, hammer out certain common understandings, and arrive at what might be called the "sophisticated point of view" in the field. Their poimt of view will usually differ from that of the rank and file of the organization and will reflect this "inner circle" participation as much or more than the experiences gained from their affiliational role with the organization they work for.

This observer, judging mainly by (1) past or present affiliation on the board of directors or (2) other indications of steady organizational support by repeated participation in NAIRO deliberations, would place about 35 persons in the "inner circle" of NAIRO. All but six of these were present at the Conference. Of this "inner circle," two-fifths are local public officials, one-fifth are national private, and the other two-fifths are scattered about equally among federal public, state public, local private, and "other."

Using this classification, then, what types of intergroup practitioners participate in conferences such as this? None of the so-called "big wheels" or "pressure boys" were regular participants at the Minneapolis Conference (possibly one or two exceptions). The Conference (see Table 1) drew a sixth of its participants from the NAIRO "inner circle" (only one of whom resided locally). Over a quarter more were "intergroup officials" (a fifth of them from nearby areas). Another sixth came from private intergroup relations agencies ("professional ethnics"), three-fourths of whom lived nearby. The "motivated periphery" contributed over a quarter, the bulk of them from the local area. And there was a small contingent of the "academic fringe" present, drawn from all over.

Needless to say, these different types of intergroup practitioners have different points of view on action techniques in intergroup relations. The one-page questionnaire reproduced below (see Exhibit A) and filled out by 110 of the practitioners enables us to identify some of these differences. The 17 action items selected were not chosen haphazardly; they represent a rationale, as indicated by Table 2.

Aside from one "set a personal example" item, half of the items are "attack discrimination" items, half are not. Of the non-"attack discrimination" items, two items favor turning it back to the minority, six items favor attacking prejudice (two by mass media, two by public exhortation, and two by group process). Of the eight "attack-discrimination" items, four favor the use of interpersonal influence, four favor the use of sanctions such as the law, picketing, or publicity. This grouping of items enables us to weigh roughly the importance attached to different philosophies of intergroup action by different types of intergroup practitioners.

Of the 110 practitioners who filled in the questionnaire, 80 either signed their names or indicated their affiliations in sufficient detail for us to classify them. We find marked differences between the items checked by the "inner circle" and "local public officials" and the other intergroup practitioners (see Table 3). The inner circle and local officials put much more emphasis on the use of legal sanctions and local citizens' committees. They put much less emphasis on getting the minority to improve itself and on trying to reduce prejudice by arranging discussion groups among parents or setting up educational courses for the public.

We can make somewhat more refined distinctions if we base our computations on the number of items checked as "very effective" rather than the number of persons checking each item. Table 4 shows several things: (1) the item "set a good personal example" was equally prominent among the "very effectives" for all the groups (although this observer has some difficulty in seeing just how a "good personal example" would change much in community setting). (2) "Attack discrimination" items decline in importance among the things considered "very effective" as you move away from the inner circle and local public officials over to the local private and miscellaneous. (3) Conversely, "attack-prejudice" items increase in popularity as you move away from the inner circle. (4) "Turn-it-back-to-the-minority" items show somewhat greater popularity among the same groups where "attack prejudice" is popular.

Even within the "attack-discrimination" items, there are differences of opinion about effectiveness. The "use-of-sanctions" items are checked more among the "inner circle" than among other groups (see Table 5). The "interpersonal-influence" items stood out prominently among the local private practitioners.

Refining still more, in selecting among the different items that would use interpersonal influence, the "officials" put more weight on citizens' committees; the other practitioners put more emphasis on workshops as "very effective" (see Table 6).

Intergroup relations officials show little difference from private agency practitioners as to which of the legal sanctions they prefer. The officials show a slightly more favorable reaction to the use of petitions, open letters, and other publicity (see Table 7).

The foregoing findings can be no more than suggestive. But they do indicate that action techniques and assumptions are researchable. On the basis of these and other considerations, the Research Department of NAIRO has decided to recommend to the Board of Directors that the Research

POPULATION TRENDS AND INTERGROUP RELATIONS

Ronald Freedman

Population trends provide the context and set the limitations for many aspects of social life, including intergroup relations. Trends in migration, in births and deaths, and in the composition of the labor force are reflected in rather dry statistics, which sometimes change almost imperceptibly in the short run but which, in the long run, have a tremendous cumulative impact in shaping the nature of our society. Of course, in our day even the "long run" has been speeded up, so that changes in population, too, are taking place at a rapid rate.

Let me disclaim at the outset any pretension that a knowledge of population trends will necessarily enable anybody to solve a specific intergroup relations problem. Population trends are more important as the broad setting out of which such problems have arisen. They are basic factors which must be taken into account in working out more specific solutions. They affect intergroup relations by determining, in part, the size and distribution of the groups involved in interaction with each other, and their composition in terms of age and sex. Insofar as we include economic characteristics in a consideration of population trends, they also affect the relative social positions and the power with which different groups meet each other in the community.

Frequently population factors also strongly influence the problem areas that are the subject or the issue in intergroup relations. I have in mind such issues as housing, overcrowded schools, segregated suburbs, employment opportunities for young people--issues about which intergroup relations may revolve and which often strongly reflect population trends. Neither these issues nor the intergroup relations involved are determined by population trends in any precise way, but such population trends as rapidly changing birth rates and migrations of masses of people set basic conditions out of which these problems develop and to which realistic problem solutions generally must conform. I would like to approach my assignment today in this context--that is, of providing a background picture of population trends which are relevant for intergroup relations, although sometimes in a rather diffuse or indirect way. I am certain that any broad population trend will inevitably affect intergroup relations in some way, because it will affect the basic structure of community life. I am not always sure just how these effects will work out in specific areas. You, who are experts in intergroup relations, will be more competent than I am to detail how these trends may affect the problems with which you work.

Consider first the role of migration trends and population redistribution. It is rather obvious that the peculiar intergroup relations problems in the American city have arisen largely because migration has brought together in interaction groups with different cultural backgrounds under the unstable conditions of the American city. To put this in another way, our great American cities do not have indigenous populations. They are the products of a continuing process of growth and reorganization in which the elements of growth have come not only from a variety of foreign areas but also from the wide variety of cultural backgrounds in our own country. Most residents of great American cities today were either themselves raised on farms or in foreign countries or are the children of migrants from these areas. All this is to say that a very large part of the people whom you wish to motivate to social action, or at least a reasonable consensus, in our great cities are not accustomed to urban life. They have not lived together long enough to have fully worked out an accommodation.

Until the first World War the great growth of American cities rested on two streams of migration. The most conspicuous was, of course, the great migration from Europe. Less conspicuous but no less important was the migration from our own rural areas. Since the first World War the migration from our own rural areas has accounted for most of the spectacular growth of our cities, and the significant group replacing the foreign immigrant has been the rural Negro. We have had almost continuously, therefore, a situation in which groups unaccustomed not only to each other but also to urban living have come in large numbers into communities undergoing social change.

We all know that the problems of relationships among European migrant groups and the native population were the principal concerns of group workers in the last generation. These problems have become somewhat less important as the percentage of our population that was foreign-born or of foreign parentage has decreased. The proportion of our population that was foreign-born has decreased from a high of 15 per cent in 1910 to 7 per cent in 1950. I think all of you are aware that such statistics do not necessarily reflect a proportionate decline in the cultural influence of ethnic backgrounds among the descendants of immigrants. The successive waves of immigrants to this country have successively occupied economic and social and political positions in some relation to their time of arrival. In some respects the population record is like a geological diagram in which social strata bear some relation to time. For example, in a recent study of Detroit we have found that the persons whose original ethnic origin--perhaps generations back--is in North Western Europe still have a distinctively better occupational, educational, and income status than those with South or East European ethnic background. This corresponds more or less to the well-known distinction between the new and the old migration. Seymour Lubell in his stimulating book, The Future of American Politics[1] has called attention to this same phenomenon of "cultural succession" in politics--the newer ethnic groups, many of them now native-born, are just now taking power as political leaders, backed in large part by their own ethnic groups.

These facts illustrate the principle that population trends of one generation continue to influence social life for successive generations--the social and cultural influences brought by an ethnic group do not necessarily disappear when its statistical classification changes to native-born. We all know that there may be problems of intergroup relations between ethnic groups, most of whom are native-born.

Despite these continuing ethnic influences, the predominant focus in population shifts in the United States has been for many years on the native rural to urban movement. The dimensions of this shift are illustrated by the fact that while 40 per cent of the present adult American population were raised on farms, only 15 per cent live on farms today. In short, one out of every four adult Americans lives off of the farm but was born on a farm. Similarly, there has been a shift from the small town to the metropolis. While we have no data on a national basis, a study of Detroit provides interesting information from one of our great new industrial centers. Considering only the adults, only 27 per cent were raised in the Detroit area, another 3 per cent had spent most of their lives in other communities with a population of a million or more, 16 per cent were from foreign places, 13 per cent from farms, and 30 per cent had come from towns of less than 100,000.

It is still true, then, that even with the end of the migration from abroad a significant part of the metropolitan population consists of strangers to the life of a great metropolis.

What difference does this make? I think that the most profound effect is in the problems it creates for effective community organization. Common understanding and collective action are made more difficult in populations so heterogeneous in background and so unaccustomed to the requirements of city life. All of you are better aware than I, of the greater problems of recruiting leadership and of developing unity in general attitudes, let alone organized collective action, in the metropolis. For example, we have recently been able to examine some data on the extent of participation in formally organized groups, such as clubs, unions, church groups, and civic organizations. It is not very great. In Detroit, for example, about 37 per cent of the adults do not belong to any organization of any type. Another 15 per cent who have formal membership in some organized activity do not even participate to the extent of attending meetings. Thus, about one in two either do not belong to any organization or are completely inactive. Only one in five report any activity in such organizations beyond attending occasional meetings. Data similar to these for Detroit are also available for a national sample.

All of you have seen reports also on the extent to which large portions of the population fail to participate in the political life of the community.

It is difficult to ascertain the extent to which these problems of communication and community organization are a resultant of the temporary heterogeneous and non-urban backgrounds of the population in cities. There is always the possibility that all these difficulties may be inherent in communities so large that most people must always be strangers to each other. It seems more reasonable to me to believe that as we develop an indigenous urban population at least some of the difficulties of urban social organization will diminish. We have some indirect evidence on this point from several studies that indicate that participation in urban community affairs is least among migrants with a rural background and increases with the length of time the migrant to the city had spent in an urban setting.

A significant part of the movement from farms to cities is Negro migration. The tremendous dimensions of this movement are indicated by the fact that, while in 1900 the proportion of Negroes who had lived in urban places was only about half of that of the rest of the population, at the present the proportions are about the same for Negroes and whites. In 1900 less than one in four Negroes lived in urban places. Today the ratio is almost two in three. This represents a phenomenal rate of urbanization for any population. It is a part of the general trend bringing the farm-reared into an urban setting.

The great period of rural to urban movement is now drawing to a close. The whole country is being urbanized in two ways. First, of course, there is the movement to cities we have just discussed. This has now developed to the point at which only 15 per cent of our total population lives on farms. The second kind of urbanization is in the movement of influence out from urban centers. The lives of substantially all of the population of the United States are now organized around and related to the institutions of the great metropolitan communities. Where the people have not come to the city, the city is coming to the people. Substantially the whole country is becoming integrated into a single closely interdependent economic and communication system. This is significant in many ways, but the point at issue here is that movement between parts of the United States will take on a different character as a larger and larger part of the population is found in essentially the same kinds of urban settings. People will be moving between relatively similar environments. Migration will be less likely to represent a movement between different cultural worlds.

This is important because the ending of migration from abroad and the coming decline of rural to urban movements will not mean an end of population movements. Our kind of complex economic system with rapid technological changes is dependent on a very considerable mobility of the labor force. The tremendous scope of this movement is indicated by the fact that in the average post-war year 7 per cent of the population has made a change in residence involving at least the crossing of a county line. It is already true that the majority of migrants are moving between urban places.

We are going to have a continuing high rate of mobility in our population, but it will probably be based on movements between relatively similar types of environments. There is some evidence that movement in itself is not so likely to create problems when it does not represent the change of cultural worlds that migration has meant in the past. A population of sophisticated urbanites who have lived in a number of different cities may be no less prejudiced in their attitudes than a group of recent rural migrants, but the possibility of reaching and developing common values through effective community organization would seem to be greater.

An important aspect of the population movement that has been bringing population to urban centers is a complementary movement of populations within metropolitan areas. In the early period of mass migration from abroad this took the form of the succession of ethnic groups in particular areas of our great cities. All kinds of conflicts grew out of these movements as different ethnic groups moved through slum areas and invaded the areas of earlier ethnic groups. Nationality gang-fights were only the more dramatic manifestations of ethnic conflicts. To a certain extent such conflicts still exist. A significant part of the historic development of the settlement house was its role in dealing with these ethnic conflicts and adjustments. The changing character of the settlement house in many areas is a reflection of the diminishing role of the older type of interethnic conflicts.

In the past 25 years the redistribution of population within metropolitan areas has taken on a different character that all of us know as the suburban movement. A series of technological developments has made possible a tremendous growth of population in outlying parts of metropolitan areas, while the core central cities have remained stationary or even declined in population. The result has been the creation of a new social and economic unit--the metropolitan community--in which political, legal, and administrative powers are frequently divided among hundreds of different authorities. Substantially all of the American population now either lives directly in a metropolitan community or is strongly dependent on the institutions centered in the metropolis.

In every metropolitan community there are acute social problems arising out of the fact that while the population of the entire metropolitan area faces many pressing common problems that transcend political boundaries, they generally have no common agencies for action on over-all metropolitan problems. There is under way a fumbling attempt to create new regional agencies for action on specific issues. However, an additional difficulty is that the potential leadership groups are moving out of the central cities, with their tremendous historic problems, into suburban areas where problems can temporarily be contained and solved on a local level. The 1950 Census shows that the suburban population generally is a better-educated, higher-income group than that in the central city.

Illustrative of the problems created by the suburban movement is the fact that in many metropolitan areas, particular suburbs may have model school systems, while in the central city the school system may be of a very low calibre. In a very general sense this problem of metropolitan organization has aggravated the intergroup relations problem by making more difficult the solution of slum problems, school problems, recreation problems, and other problems which frequently are the substantive basis for intergroup tensions.

In a more specific sense, with regard to Negro-white relations, the redistribution of metropolitan population has concentrated Negroes in the central cities. For example, in metropolitan areas with a population of a million or more persons, 38 per cent of the white population lives in the suburbs as compared with only 15 per cent of the Negro population. This means that Negroes are concentrated in the central cities where social problems are most acute and where resources are relatively poorest. It is to be expected that movements toward a metropolitan-wide solution of problems will become mixed up with intergroup relations problems. Many suburbs now effectively exclude Negroes. This issue is likely to become increasingly prominent as the problems requiring joint action become more acute and the Negro populations of the central cities increase.

Regional redistribution in population should also be mentioned. The most dramatic growth, of course, has been in the population of the Pacific and Mountain states. This has also been the region in which the Negro population has grown most rapidly. Otherwise there has not been a close correspondence by regions between general population growth and growth of Negro population. The outstanding fact has been the movement of the Negro out of the South and to all other regions. In all but two states outside the South the rate of growth of the Negro population has been greater than that of the rest of the population. In many cases the difference in rate of growth is four or five to one. In every Southern state the reverse is true; the Negro population is growing more slowly than the rest of the population. In eight Southern states there has been an actual decline in Negro population. These shifts are almost entirely due to migration. While attention has been centered mainly on problems of intergroup relations at the places to which Negroes are migrating, I suspect problems of a different character may appear at the places from which they are coming.

While the redistribution of population is dispersing Negroes into many states from a relative point of view, in absolute numbers the important fact is an increasing concentration of Negroes in a few large cities. The ten cities with the largest Negro populations in 1950 absorbed more than 50 per cent of the total growth of Negro population in the United States between 1940 and 1950. The same cities absorbed only 4 per cent of the total growth of white population in the United States. There is evidence that this concentration trend is continuing. The possible consequences are manifold, arising out of the focusing of the problems of Negro-white relations in a relatively few places where the scale of the problem is massive, and where Negroes are collectively able to bring increasing pressure. The general issue of concentration versus dispersion is most complex. The fact of a cumulative concentration makes any case for dispersion largely academic in the short run. We shall have to deal with the consequences of concentration, not its desirability.

I have developed some of the trends that result from migration in considerable detail because these seem to me to be most critical in creating intergroup problems and in setting conditions which affect the solution of a whole series of problems in which intergroup relations are one aspect.

Another basic determinant of population trends is the birth rate. The baby boom and the high birth rate since the war have reversed a long-run trend for a lower birth rate going back to 1800. Most demographers believe that this reversal is only temporary, that birth rates will not remain at their present high levels. They also generally believe that birth rates will fluctuate rather widely in the future in closer relation to general economic and social conditions than they have in the past. If this is true, it means that we may expect an intermittent repetition of such hectic problems as school expansion and housing demand created in part by the present baby boom. Many of you know that problems of intergroup relations have been enmeshed in the controversies in many local areas on specific plans to meet these problems. Again here it seems to me that population trends play their role because they create general problems for the total community which force action on issues such as housing developments in which explicit decisions have to be taken on interracial housing. They force an explicit consideration of issues that might otherwise remain dormant.

The white and Negro birth rates have followed the same general trend in the last two decades, although the Negro rate has remained substantially the higher. Of course, one important aspect of these variations in the birth rate is the impact on the age structure for years later. For example, as a result of the lower birth rates of the depression years, there was an 11 per cent decrease in the number of white males aged 10-19 between 1940 and 1950. On the other hand, there has been an increase in the number of Negroes in this age group. The significance of this fact is that by 1960 this age group will be 20-29 years old, that is, the core of the labor force taking starting jobs. There is likely to be a shortage of manpower at this point, and the relative position of the more plentiful young Negro workers may be improved thereby.

Along with migration and births, deaths are the third basic component of population trends. There are some who have asserted that the best single index of the well-being of a society is the average length of life of the general population and of the major constituent groups. As you know, by this criterion we have done very well as a nation. The average expectation of life has increased by 20 years since 1900 and by 13 years since 1920. The nonwhite population has not only shared in the general gain but has somewhat improved its relative position. In 1920 the average expectation of life was ten years greater for whites than for nonwhites. By 1949, this difference had been reduced to about seven years, while both groups made very substantial gains. Insofar as the average expectation of life reflects the general impact of social and economic conditions, this would seem to reflect an absolute and a relative improvement in the position of the Negro. This is not to minimize the large remaining discrepancy which indicates that the chances for life itself are not yet equal in our society for Negroes and whites.

One important result of the declining death rates and the longer life expectancy is a changing age distribution. The most dramatic evidence of this is the increasing proportion of our population over 65 years of age. This is producing a variety of problems in the areas of housing, recreation, and--perhaps most important--financial support. As in many other cases, there is probably not a special problem of intergroup relations here, but rather a specific case of general problems. Programs developing in the old-age field will have to cope with the existing prejudices and intergroup tensions in designing these programs. One special difficulty will be in the area of financial security. Our social security programs for meeting the problems of old age have not functioned equally well for whites and nonwhites because Negroes have not been found so frequently in the industries covered, nor have they had the steady employment required to build up claims for benefits. As a result, many fewer Negroes than whites are covered by those programs. Among those covered, the level of potential benefits is considerably lower for Negroes. The result of this will be to emphasize increasingly the dependent position of the Negro, as a greater part of the population reaches old age.

The combination of differences in birth and death rates has produced rather sharp differences in the age distributions of Negroes and whites. For example, a considerably larger proportion of the Negro population than the white are in the childhood ages. About 40 per cent of the Negro population is under 20 years of age as compared with 33 per cent of the white population. As time goes on this is likely to produce differential pressures and opportunities in education, in employment, and in such areas as selective service.

I have summarized briefly some of the trends in migration, mortality, and births which seem to be most relevant source material for the study of intergroup relations.

Finally, I would like to turn to some broad trends in the social and economic position of the Negro in America. I have felt no hesitancy in concentrating my discussion today on the position of the Negro since white-Negro relations continue to be of central importance. Moreover, our information is much better on this aspect of the problem than for other kinds of intergroup differences.

The materials on socioeconomic traits are so voluminous that some organizing idea is required to deal with them. Perhaps Myrdal's concept of the "Vicious Circle" may serve this purpose. Many of you will remember this concept from Myrdal's monumental An American Dilemma.[2] The idea is simply that attitudes toward the Negro or other minority groups are intertwined in a vicious circle with two other elements--the Negro's economic position and the standards of behavior and personality that go with that position. As Myrdal puts it, for example, the white man "sees" the Negro is in depressed occupations with depressed standards of life. He then jumps to the unwarranted conclusion that the Negro is incapable of handling a complicated machine, running a business, or learning a profession. Myrdal then suggests that considering the three elements--economic position, standards of life, and intergroup attitudes--as an interdependent system, changes in any one will bring changes in the other two and through mutual interaction move the whole system along in one direction or another. Myrdal suggests that the economic position of the Negro is strategically the point in the whole system at which leverage can be most easily extended to shift the whole system towards our ideals of equality and non-discrimination.

What, then, have been some of the trends in the economic position of the Negro?

Perhaps the most basic change has been in occupational and industrial distribution. As a correlate of his rapid movement to the city, the Negro has been going through a phenomenally rapid transformation from concentration in agriculture to concentration in manufacturing and other urban occupations. As recently as 1940, more than 40 per cent of all employed Negro males were in agriculture. By 1952 that figure was more than halved--less than 20 per cent of employed Negro men are in agriculture now. The transformation for Negro women is equally remarkable--a shift from 20 per cent in agriculture in 1940 to about 5 per cent today. Strongly prejudiced popular stereotypes of the Negro as a poor, unskilled peasant type, inevitably bound to the land, are losing any significant basis in reality. It will, of course, be some time before the Negro standards of life lose the influence of the rural background in which they were developed. This is equally true for white rural migrants, for example, from the South, but differences there are not strongly reinforced by social prejudice.

In general, the distribution of whites and Negroes by industry is much more similar today than it was as recently as 1940. For example, the difference in the proportion of Negroes and whites in wholesale and retail trade has been reduced from 6 per cent to 3 per cent. In transportation and communication, from 3 per cent to less than one per cent, and so on.

With respect to specific occupations, changes for the Negro in the last ten years have been in the same direction as those in the general population. The most striking change is the migration of Negroes out of the farming occupation into the semiskilled occupations classified by our Census as "operatives." This is true for both men and women. Both Negro men and women have made small but significant gains in white collar occupations in the last decade. However, the discrepancy between the white and nonwhite occupational situations is still very considerable and a serious matter for intergroup relations. Only about 9 per cent of the employed Negro men in 1950 were white collar workers as compared with 33 per cent of white employed men. For women the corresponding figures are 12 per cent for Negro women and 57 per cent for white women. The disadvantaged position of the Negro is also seen strikingly at the lower end of the occupational scale. Twenty-three per cent of Negro workers are unskilled laborers as compared with only 7 per cent of white workers. Among Negro women, private household work continues to be the most typical occupation despite a sharp decrease in this occupation from about 60 per cent of all Negro women workers in 1940 to about 40 per cent today. This decrease is due mainly to the general decline in the use of private household workers. Negro women were actually a larger proportion of private household workers in 1952 than in 1940. In general, then, it would appear that while the Negro has made substantial occupational gains in the last decade, his occupational position is still very different and very inferior. The trend may be pushing Myrdal's "Vicious Circle" in the right direction, but there is still a substantial economic basis for unfortunate stereotypes of the Negro.

With respect to family income, the situation is much the same as with occupation. The Negro has shared in the recent general gains of the economy. However, a very substantial difference remains. In 1950 the average family income for Negroes was only 54 per cent that of white families. This differential is particularly wide, if we remember that a higher proportion of Negro family members are in the labor force. The relative income position of the Negro is better in urban than in rural areas, but the general magnitude of the difference is about the same.

In the long run, the economic opportunities open to the Negro may depend on his educational qualifications. Moves to open new occupational opportunities for Negroes are reinforced if their educational level meets the rising standards of the jobs. While the educational attainment of the Negro population is still substantially below that of the whites, substantial progress has been made by the Negro in gaining an education. Here again, we might say that the "Vicious Circle" is being pushed in the right direction, but there is still a substantial basis for false stereotypes in intergroup relations based on projecting the actual lower status of the Negro to a perception of an inherently lower level of ability and performance.

I have discussed today some of the important population trends which are likely to be part of the setting for developments in intergroup relations. I do not pretend to know all of the ways in which these changes in our basic population structure will affect intergroup relations. Given the population trends as a base, I suspect that your views on possible consequences are more informed than mine. The materials I have presented are intended to serve as a taking-off point and a general background for more specific discussions.

THE STRUCTURE AND DYNAMICS OF THE COMMUNITY

Floyd Hunter

Within recent years research into community social structures has largely centered around class, institutional, and organizational groupings. Research into class and institutional structures has given us some very interesting quick-shutter shots of community life, but these researches cannot be characterized, on the whole, as pieces of action research. In order to get a picture of action within a community, it seems necessary for us to examine the organizations within community life that make both the class and institutional structures operative. We shall elaborate on what is meant here as we go along.

In the field of action research--researching action groups--we are making some progress. We are seeing that we need to know more about formal action bodies such as those related to city government, corporate enterprises, chambers of commerce, health and welfare organizations, and we are seeing, too, that we need to know a good deal more about informal social groupings that may operate both within and outside the formal organizations and that have very real effect on the direction of the latter. We are also seeing that communities are not isolated entities operating independently of the main stream of American society.

In this presentation, several items will be touched upon. Four of them are:

1. Neither class nor institutional frames of reference, standing alone, seem adequate for a study of community action processes.

2. Action research may be carried out by examining groups and organizations within the community that are in dynamic relation to each other.

3. One way of spotting community action is to ascertain what issues and projects of major proportions confront the community.

4. Some problems facing communities cannot be solved through local, isolated effort.

With these points of view set down, two other ideas will be threaded into this report. (1) Researchers are convinced, these days, that any piece of research needs to have carefully thought-out hypotheses to guide it within some adequate framework of theory so that proper questions can be asked in the research process. (2) Present researches, compared with those of a generation ago, are characterized by an empirical approach to community data--that is, researchers are actually going into communities to pick up materials. We are not sitting down and spinning theories about community life, but we are interviewing people, observing activities, and relating our work to the works of others.

Since some of the best recent community researches have been conducted along the lines of ascertaining community class structures, and since we have already indicated that this line of approach may not be the most fruitful way of getting at an analysis of action structures within the community, perhaps it would be well to dwell for a moment on why this has been said.

Much has been written in recent years about social stratification. It appears, in the minds of social scientists at least, that communities are composed of layers of classes--each class exhibiting a composite array of attitudes, modes of dress, similar living-room furniture, a sameness of recreation habits, and comparable ways of going about the process of earning a comparable living. A good logical case is made for a bad situation (in terms of the so-called American dream) in which moving upward from one class to another is not as easy as it was once said to be. The picture is a dreary, if not a basically disturbing one.

Excellent works along this line have been produced by Lloyd Warner, John Useem, August Hollingshead, Oliver Cox, and Gunnar Myrdal, among others. Examples of their works are contained in the Yankee City Series,[1] "Stratification in a Prairie Town," Elmtown's Youth,[2] Caste, Class, and Race,[3] and An American Dilemma.[4] These works represent logical and empirical attacks on the problem of stratification. We applaud the courage and scholarship of the authors involved. The concepts they have made explicit give us good backdrops for research into organizational action structures.

Past analysis has given us useful ideas that have become a part of our everyday language. We speak more confidently than we once did of such generalized concepts as the upper middle class or the lower lower class. Because of the researches into stratification, other words have become familiar to us, such as "status," "role," "position," "prestige bearers," and the like. All of these words can be related to specific persons and groups within social structures, and they are extremely useful in analysis of data turned up in observations of groups and action.

We cannot as yet speak very confidently of the number of classes that are extant in our communities. The researchers have differed on the question of numbers. Warner has six classes, Useem three, Hollingshead five. The fact that these workers do not agree on the number of classes does not, in my opinion, invalidate the main lines of their work. They are in essential agreement on attitudes and characteristics found in upper-, middle-, and lower-class groupings within the communities they have described. There are some questions, however, that trouble one if an attempt is made to use the class concept as an analysis of action groups. Some of these questions need to be answered.

Are the stratified classes in dynamic relation to each other as classes? Do individual members of a particular class move in a coordinated fashion in relation to other members of the same class and in relation to other classes? Are social issues seen in the same perspective by all members of the same class? The answers to all of these questions may be "yes," but more research is needed to make the answer emphatic. There are many other questions that might be asked about the whole approach of social analysis on a class basis. It is not my purpose to make this writing a class critique, but I do want to highlight points in stratification and class analysis that seem valid in social action research and to proceed from this point.

The class analysts have made it very clear that persons do evaluate others through the use of superiority-inferiority mental constructs. Class positions offer symbolic reference for gauging relative social positions between people, and may enhance or deter interaction between individuals or groups. Class implies positions acquired at birth--positions that are subject to change by achievement. Those who learn to ride the ropes of organizational structures, corporate or civic, achieve in our society and continue to deny and climb the rungs of general class structures. The "doers" in our society still achieve, and if we wish to study action and the effects of action, perhaps we should take a close look at the doers, using class analyses as reference points if we will. I am not completely sure that we have to, but one may if he wishes.

My own feeling for a baseline of behavior research on a community level turns my efforts toward trying to understand the inter-relationships between individuals and groups engaged in activities within complex organizations--policy groups, civic organization, and corporate structures. There is a reality, I feel, in the study of formal and informal organizations that one does not find in research that is completely class oriented. The use of hierarchical concepts drawn from class analysis may fit organizational groupings and be useful.

We also stated in the beginning of this paper that we did not believe that the institutional frame of reference is completely adequate for a study of community action processes. A word on that is in order, perhaps, before we move to a discussion of organizational research per se.

A part of the task of this paper was to examine the possibility of community groups' changing institutional patterns. I believe that groups within communities can add a mite to changing institutional patterns, but I do not believe that a single community can do too much in this direction. I say this because institutions (if we mean the broad social institutions of economics, religion, education, the family, politics, welfare, and the like) are society-wide in scope, and furthermore they are products, in some measure, of analytical constructs on the part of sociologists and other social scientists who have given us a convenient term (as also in the case of class analysts) to designate broad-scale human groupings. In life and in reality all of the so-called institutions are interwoven, almost inextricably, into a total scheme of action we call society, but the associations in society make the whole operate.

The associations in American life and formal organizations rooted in law and custom can be physically located, examined, and researched. Institutions, as such, cannot be. We can talk about institutions, but we cannot find them when we look for them. We can find factories, church buildings, homes, school houses, and a host of organizations devoted to keeping these manifestations of institutions alive. It is at these points that we must look, I believe, for answers to questions related to social change.

No specific community group can attack a problem of insufficient income by approaching the "economic institution," but almost every day working men and women bind themselves together into specific unions to demand specific amounts of money from specific corporations and business houses. Working men know where to look for what they want, and social researchers might take a lesson from them. We may look for the places at which things are happening if we want to do action research. Research at the job point of industry and commerce will be much more productive than research related to the generalized notion of economic institutions. And so on for the other so-called institutions. Action must be examined in terms of specifics rather than by the use of generalities.

If we pose the question of social change and action in relation to making changes possible, the facts of life dictate to us that men organize themselves formally and informally into associations for effecting specific purposes. To get things done on a community basis, men organize themselves into associations that are characterized by power gradations. Because this can be observed to be true, it would seem that an analysis of power relationships might give us something in trying to come to an understanding of community dynamics.

During the past three years, I, and other members of the Institute for Research in Social Science at the University of North Carolina, have been engaged in several studies of "power structures" in communities. To date we have explored the possibilities of this type of research in seven communities ranging in population size from a few hundred to a half million. Six of these communities are located in the South, and one, a community of 40,000, in New England. Two of the studies have been published to date. Another study with which I have been concerned over the past seven or eight months deals with inter-relationships between community leaders and some of the major cities of the country, and we shall speak briefly of this latter study after touching upon the specific community studies.

If one begins with the premise that communities are basic locations of action--concerted action in relation to major social enterprises --then obviously some one group or series of groups are involved. If power be simply defined as the ability of men to move other men to move goods and services or to stop such movement, then the problem of power delineation can be attacked. Any community, even the smallest, is the locus of thousands upon thousands of individual actions in any one day. Some actions are obviously more important than others in relation to the community as a whole. In like manner, some of the actors in moving goods and services are relatively more important in specific situations than others. Some men and women are instrumental in furnishing a sense of direction for concerted effort. They are policy-makers--decision-makers--and they hold special positions in the community's scheme of things. These are then people to look for in sighting the direction of action.

We find that such concepts as status, role, position, and prestige, that have been widely used in stratification studies have been useful in researching limited groups contained in a community as a whole. But if we stopped at merely defining and describing the structures that one may observe in a community, and in the terms indicated, we would not have a complete action picture. We must know how various groups function in relation to each other. The word function is important here and is related to the process of research widely known these days as "structural-functional analysis." The approach merely means that we isolate and identify groups that are engaged in doing something and we relate the action of the group to a greater social whole. A series of interviews with members of various groups that have been related to each other in getting something done reveals "functional" relationships between the groups.

An over-all function of group combinations may well be that of maintaining class dominance within the total community structure (certainly there is a latent function involved), but most men that we have interviewed within the past two or three years have had more short-range goals in mind. Most of them have been interested, first of all, in bettering their positions within bureaucratic structures, within their own "crowds," or within an informal but real pyramid of power.

Within the communities we have studied on a power basis, there appear to be various pyramids of power--business, labor, civic associations, church groupings, political organizations--that relate rather specifically to each other in matters of policy and direction of community ventures. The structures of such pyramids of power can be identified and described easily enough. Within the community context there are many activities, year by year, in which most of these groupings are functionally related. If one asks for issues or projects that confront any community at a given time, the officers and leaders within the associational groupings mentioned can tell the researcher rather quickly the nature of those larger ventures. And more importantly still, they can indicate who is "behind all the movement." Research carried on during a specific project, and reconstruction research carried on in relation to projects recently completed, gives one a dynamic picture of community movement. Projects, for example, that require large bond issues, manifold man hours of labor, and intricate meshing of individual talents and organizational work are likely to reveal a great deal about how things get done in any individual community. An investigation of such projects may also reveal that there is a relatively stable policy-making group related to the larger projects and issues that may act as a cap stone in an informal pyramid of power relations within the community, i.e., it is possible to find certain uniformities of behavior on the part of specific individuals who act in such a way as to direct the activities of others, and the whole pattern of action can be described as a power structure.

Informal "clearances," formal conference procedures, methods of "putting pressure on key people," and means of "carrying the story to the public" (or not carrying it) can all be found if one digs at trying to find out "how things get done." This is, I believe, a partial answer to what we mean when we say that we wish to study "structural dynamics," "interaction patterns," and "systems of communication." Analyzing the processes of project formulation, authority delegation, and final execution--both within formal organization limits and without--reveals community structural dynamics.

In the process of study of power structures, it becomes apparent that certain community groupings are considered more potent than others. Economic associations, individual industrial groupings, and business groups in general seem to "carry a lot of weight" in the decision-making process and in finally getting things done. This will come as no surprise to anyone, but the fact can be demonstrated empirically. The role of certain civic organizations, well intentioned as they may be, or church groupings in some communities, or those who are considered the socially elite, and many other organizational groupings may be functional to the whole in getting things done in a power way, but they do not wield influence of the economic powers. These are organizational status positions that must be recognized in action analyses.

The man sitting at the job point of power as the head of a large corporate enterprise has much influence regardless of the size of the community studied thus far, and if we are looking for spots to study in the future, it may well be that a closer look at the network of business-community relationships in politics, education, mass communications, and religion would be a good place to begin. These are points that are all functionally related to one another in the structures of communities, and if we are to bring about change within the whole structure, the activities within the organizations mentioned will have to be changed. One can, perhaps, begin the process of change at any point since change at any one point is reflected throughout the system, but change at the top may bring the most wide-spread results.

While communities and groups within communities may be instruments of social change, communities standing alone cannot solve some of the problems that face them. In relation to the larger issues, those, for example, related to such items as segregation, fiscal policy, welfare policy (including housing, health measures, and the like), the community often finds itself helpless to cope with the bigness of the problems presented. One learns rather quickly, in community work on the level of community organization, that certain problems transcend community abilities and that communities are a part of the greater whole of American society. The community may be a good starting place for discussion and various approaches at solving problems, but sooner or later with some of the larger problems we must link ourselves up with state and national groups to solve our local difficulties. Many may not like the idea of forswearing complete local autonomy, but in relation to some of the problems that face us we need clearing houses located at national and state levels to help us. Housing is a classical example of a problem that communities acting alone, community by community, have not solved. We will continue to fuss about this issue, perhaps for some time to come, but in North Carolina (specifically) we are finding that we need federal aid if we are really going to do a wholesale job in relation to housing. There are many who oppose "going to Washington," and the opposition is momentarily in the ascendency. The opposition is not, however, solving our problem. They are advising that we forget about it, and that is hard to do. People still need houses in North Carolina.

Communities are functional parts of the American societal system. There are organizational links, ties between individuals, conference groups, propaganda groups, pressure groups, and many other types of gearing that make us a nation that produces food, clothing, shelter, recreation, and a host of services for our whole people. If we wish to research problems in the area of intercommunity relationships, we may pose a few questions that might guide such research. What are the links between various communities? Who are some of the key persons in the linking process? Are trade associations as vital as they are said to be in the literature about them? Does America have sixty families who are as potent as George Lundberg said they were? Does steel dominate the price picture? Who in steel decides on price? Is the NAM more potent really than the other lobby groups? How is the community function of Detroit, making cars, related to the community function of Chicago, packing meat? Do the auto makers have any kind of relationship with the meat packers--personal or otherwise? Do corporate managers represent "a new breed of cats" in relation to public policy? How do all of these questions relate to the individual community?

These are researchable questions. There are many more. There are national groups that are concerned with these questions. There are some communication links between these associational groups and community groups. And in a very real sense, national groups and community groups are extensions of, and complementary to, each other. The larger national associations and corporations are structural parts of communities operating at a level where change within them presages and reflects social change because many of them are society-wide in scope. Communities have a responsibility of making known to the larger organizations in society their particular needs and desires, but here one often finds breaks in communication. We need to know why such breaks exist.

We need more empirical study conducted upon a societal level--national level--to fit the community concept into some perspective and to see what role individual communities and groups within communities play in the societal scheme of affairs.

A beginning of such study may flow from some of the facts picked up in community power structure researches. In these pieces of research, one finds that certain individuals in specific communities tend to operate on a national level. Key community individuals have a knowledge of other national figures. Corporate executives know other corporate executives in distant cities. They talk with each other about business affairs and about matters of national policy. Some of the national policies discussed related to key issues within community life.

Within the past few months, I have had the opportunity of visiting some of the major cities in the nation and talking with persons within these cities who are called, by many, "community leaders," and in some instances, "national leaders." This talking with leaders falls under the heading of a piece of "pilot research" to determine whether or not there is communication between top community leaders, city by city, on matters of "national policy in the making." In a very real sense, I hesitate to designate what has been done thus far with the title "Research," but what is being done begins to give some clues and cues to possible intensive research in specifiable areas. "What part do communities play in development of national policy?" By merely asking the question, one is compelled to work out research means, however rough, to get it answered. In the process of getting some answers from selected personnel in some of the larger cities, it becomes apparent that there are regional groupings of leaders concerned with specific issues, there are large-scale national associations concerned with specific issues, there is a status and prestige hierarchy, informal in nature, operative at the national level. I am not prepared to go much beyond these meager suggestions at the moment, but it is apparent that there is a network of relationships rooted in communities that extend to the national level in relation to national policies. It is further possible to do an empirical piece of research in this area.

In bringing these remarks to a close, I would like to refer back to a third item mentioned in the opening paragraphs of this paper. We said, "one way of spotting community action is to ascertain what issues and what projects of major proportions confront the community." Action groups always have goals in mind. To work toward their goals, policies are set by specific individuals and either carried out by these individuals or by those they can command.

Some of the most vital action groups are formed in relation to controversial subjects. We need, then, to define such groups and find their position in relation to the more stable groups of the community--we need, in short, to research the controversial. Until we do, we may research social action of meaningless varieties, but we will not be in the middle of questions of social change.

There is probably no one blueprint of research design that will tell us how to research every action structure within a given community.

Any particular research design must always be modified to get at the specific question that one is asking. Let us illustrate, concretely, how field research may modify a preconceived design.

We have a graduate student at the University of North Carolina who wanted to go into a very small community in South Carolina to examine power relationships in an industrial boom town. This student took with him a research design that had been utilized in working out power relationships in a metropolitan community. After about a month in residence in the community, the student came back to the University very distressed. He said, "I do not believe that there is any power structure in Boom Town. In your research design and field work you found that policy makers worked through formal committees and formal organizations, in many instances, to achieve their ends. In Boom Town formal organizations, in a civic sense, are practically non-existent. There are no committees in the community. All the big people in town know each other on a first-name basis and they just drop by each other's offices and decide things!"

Well! Because there were no committees and formal civic organizations in Boom Town, such as there were in Regional City, the metropolitan community mentioned, did not prove that there was no power structure in Boom Town. We have since posed the simple questions, "What is there in Boom Town, and how do things get done?" And an excellent piece of research is going forward.

In all of this discussion we have been concerned with action groups. We have touched upon the fact that organizations may play an important part in bringing activity to logical conclusions. Nothing has been said about the individual or the millions of individuals who may not belong to action groups or associations. It is possible, at some point, that some of us might want to turn our attention to inaction groups, and here I will merely pose questions that many of us undoubtedly have thought upon. "What of the unorganized individual who quietly makes up his mind on issues in an age in which joining massive associations and the utilizing of pressure and force seem to be the ways of getting things done?" Inaction is perhaps our biggest problem in change. How do we approach a study of this phenomenon? I can only pose the questions at this point and not attempt to answer them.

I become increasingly convinced, as I go around and talk with people, that they are willing to answer questions on almost any action subject that we wish to investigate. Social science research is apparently fairly well established and accepted in our culture. Many people that I have talked to in relation to policy subjects have wondered why some of the sociologists have not been around before. Our problem as researchers, then, is possibly that of asking questions that are meaningful to us, first of all, and that in the long run have solid social implications. Knowledge has always been a lever for change. We can strengthen the lever, as a people, as we will.

(Dr. Hunter concluded his presentation with the reading of a case study on a Southern community, which has since been published as "Power Is Where You Find It," Adult Leadership, 3 [May, 1954], 4-5.)

PERSONALITY AND INTERGROUP RELATIONS

Gardner Murphy

No man is an island. Even in those moments of intense solitude when we strive to realize the meaning of our own existence, or to reach out to some eternal cosmic principle which is beyond man, we realize our deep humanity, our need of one another, our membership in one another.

Much has been written since the time of Darwin about the biological roots of human nature, about the cave man and the savage. But in point of fact, the biology which has sprung from Darwin's way of thinking shows how intensely social we are, how deeply the members of all the higher species depend upon their group life for the realization of their own existence, how intensely humankind reflects an interpersonal craving for social fulfillment, which is just as deep as any sense of difference, any need for individualistic self-expression.

When we speak, therefore, today, of man as a bio-social animal, a creature who has both biological individuality and the need to express himself in the social group, we are not speaking of a conflict between his biological nature and his social nature. Rather, his social cravings spring from his biological nature; and his social life, far from being grafted artificially upon the biological, is a fulfillment of his existence as a living thing. The social is, in fact, the rich, complex fulfillment of man's nature, becoming ever more complex as both biological and social evolution continue. I stress this point because, so often, we still tend today to set up an artificial contrast between man's supposed individualistic nature springing from the ruthless competitiveness of the past, and the warm, generous interpersonal social life which we strive for today. I think the case could be made more convincingly that artificial forms of social living, setting the hand of one man against that of another, can interfere with the fulfillment of the individual personality.

But when we speak of man as bio-social, we must also stress the fact that every member of the species has his own individuality, both with respect to the tissues of which his body is made, and with respect to the patterns of self-fulfillment which the learning process represents. The individual is biologically unique, and his life history is unique. He comes, therefore, to see the world in a manner which, though shared with many others, has its own distinctive mark. This can be shown particularly easily in the psychology of perception. Traditionally, we have imagined that everyone sees essentially alike. The modern approach to the psychology of perception has shown how far this notion is from the truth. Different human groups with different sensitization to the world around them actually see, for example, different things in the lightning and hear different things in the thunder, and every individual member of each community sees and hears in his own personal terms. The recent experiments of Witkin[1] and of Klein[2] bring out the deep individuality which appears in every laboratory task, one person making distinctions which another ignores, one emphasizing and organizing in a way which is distinctive only of himself.

Each child, for example, sees as his own individuality and his own situation requires. This has often been something of a surprise to us, as for example, when we study the different meanings of race to different children. We might assume from a naive point of view that one child is like another in observing the skin color and the other criteria of race which distinguish himself, the members of his own family, the members of various families in the community, noting the physical differences, but discounting their importance. In a sense, this whole picture is wrong. Actually, each child does, of course, begin to note distinctions, but whether these are important or not, will depend very largely upon the social meanings which are attributed to them. He does not first see white or black, and then attach an importance to it. Rather, his emotions are growing as his distinctions in perception are made, and he may, even in the early years, come to perceive black as good, and white as bad, or vice versa; or, as in the studies by Kenneth and Mamie Clark,[3] Negro children exposed to the general prejudice against dark pigmentation, may see pictures and dolls of darker hue as less desirable. Year by year, as appears in Horowitz' study,[4] the child comes to take over more and more completely the pattern of perception which characterizes the group in which he is reared. He may make those distinctions upon which there is emphasis. Other distinctions he tends to ignore. There are, however, within any stereotyped process, wide individual variations, and one finds in Horowitz' study, as in others, a tremendous range from those who take over uncritically the standardized or stereotype position of the group, to those who deviate wholly from it and show none of the impact of the group pressure.

It is customary to emphasize rather unfortunately only the tragic consequences of social and individual factors in perception. It should be recalled, as Llewellyn has made clear, that in the first instance the little child naturally craves solidarity and unity with those about him. He takes over the habits of perceiving, feeling, understanding, remembering, thinking, and imagining which make him an acceptable and normal person. In this he derives strength. When Mrs. Murphy and I were in India for UNESCO observing the relations of Hindus and Muslims and the people of high or low caste, and the people of cities and villages, we found borne in upon us ever more strongly the fact that the child of India must crave and receive a deep sense of unity with his own group, because it is the only safety, the only strength, the only stability which life can offer. We may think, for example, of caste as an unmitigated evil, and it may well be when conceived in terms of intergroup prejudice and hostility. Historically, however, and still to a large degree, today, caste represents a basis by which even the humblest may discover solidarity, strength, and unity with their fellows. The problem, then, in contemporary India, is not the simple one of liquidating the tradition of caste. In the same way, in our own country and elsewhere, the problem of intergroup patterning can hardly be effectively conceived in safely negative terms, in terms of destruction of the sense of group unity and group solidarity. Rather, this phenomenon of social solidarity is a basic fact which characterizes all early perception and, indeed, all early psychological responses, and without it, nothing like the normal development of human personality is possible. The positive problem is to create, along with this sense of group membership, a sense of communication, a sense of fellowship and equal status with the members of other groups.

This leads to an issue which has been much discussed under the general head of cultural pluralism. Is it essential for mental health that all individuals identify with some great central national standard and forget the individuality of their own sub-group? Is it, on the other hand, more desirable that we develop in our democracy a sense of diversity, a sense of the richness and many-sidedness of our national life, each group retaining its traditions? Can the two be combined, as in Walt Whitman's passionate identification with the people of all lands and periods and, at the same time, his intense sense of membership in America? Can personality actually grow up rugged and ready to withstand stress and chaos if there is no strong central loyalty to an in-group? The reply may very well be that this sense of oneness with the in-group can provide the very basis upon which a sense of fellowship with other groups can be established, whereas if the child has never had a satisfying sense of group membership, he can scarcely afford the luxury of multiple-group membership. If one is never accepted by one's own group and never proud to be one of its members, one can hardly ever take seriously the invitation of other groups, the sense that one is really wanted elsewhere.

But if the child has not this sense of primary oneness with his group, is there anything that can be done to make up for what should have been done in the first years? I believe that the answer is in the affirmative, and that we can learn enormously from those who have undertaken to develop a sense of worth among those whose early years had not afforded it. I think, gratefully, of the years when Fanny French Morse, superintendent of the New York State Training School for Girls, showed us what could be done with the adolescent girls entrusted to her care. Here were a group of girls, 14, 15, and 16 years of age, who had been kicked around, humiliated, and often driven into a toughness and hostility quite alien to the original core of human nature, marched about in solemn, silent two-by-two's, assigned mechanically to jobs which meant nothing to them, allowed no beautiful or personal things in their rooms, no recreation except in the presence of an adult who watched their every act and word. Here came Mrs. Morse's sudden declaration: the guardhouse made into a recreation room, the strait jackets burned up, the girls allowed pictures, their own beauty shop, their own regular weekend visitors--families and boy friends from the city. Those who saw the transformed, joyful faces of these girls could never forget what it meant to discover a mother, a restoration to group living. Starting on the assumption that people were potentially social, starting on the assumption that they strongly needed a we-group which was inwardly coherent and satisfying, she discovered that by the realization of the true self in the group, actually, the hostility toward the group disappeared. Instead of finding that personality weighed down by a decade of wretched habits could only sink under its own weight, she had the courage and faith to demonstrate that new personalities could be made. The psychodramatic methods of Dr. Moreno carried forward in the years when Mrs. Morse was superintendent of the New York State Training School were an enrichment and elaboration of this conception of spontaneous creativeness, the realization of the self in the group.

Today one must attempt in such a discussion to make clear that this development of a sense of one's own individuality and group membership depends to a considerable degree upon understanding of social roles, that is, assigned tasks which one can learn to understand and effectively carry out. Here Moreno's use of the psychodrama, many of the techniques of group dynamics, and indeed, very widely, the stage as an instrument of education, have helped us to make more clear to what an extraordinary degree the process of becoming a person is a process of understanding roles and integrating the roles. You see this most clearly if you notice, as in the studies by Hartley, Rosenbaum, and Schwartz,[5] how limited the little child's understanding of roles may be. A six-year-old may say, "My daddy carries letters, but when he's a mailman, he's not my daddy; and when he's my daddy, he's not a mailman. My mommy is Jewish because she reads the Jewish newspaper, and she is American because we watch the parade where my daddy is marching. My mommy is American then, and she's not Jewish; and when she is Jewish, she is not American." These conceptions of a little child, anchored upon the conception of roles, appear to be more than instances of linguistic confusion. The child discovers the various acts, expected performances which mark a place in life, and must learn gradually how these can be combined, so that a given individual, for example, can be husband, father, mailman, Jew, Democrat, music lover, all in one. He himself, too, must learn these roles. He must learn what is appropriate, what is done by boys of his age, and he must learn in terms of all the club, group, religious, ethnic, and other assigned roles which belong to him. As a matter of fact, personality can be conceived, to a considerable degree, in terms of the integration of the many roles. Often, a person's hostile or irrational behavior may be understood more effectively if we realize that he is consciously or unconsciously acting the role which he has assigned himself or which others have assigned him.

Again, in India, we had many illustrations of this pattern, with reference to the development of hostility between Hindus and Muslims, which became, as you know, so terrible at the time of the partition of India, in 1947. To be a good Muslim, for example, one must believe and one must spread the rumors indicating the persecution of Muslims by Hindus. The newspapers actually are solidly built up from material representing the specific ethnic and religious slant of their publishers. As one learns solidarity with a group, one learns what one must believe regarding the other group. My friend Pars Ram made a series of intimate studies of rumors and their transmission in the city of Aligarh. A little hostility between two groups of boys, Hindu and Moslem, was spread through the rumor factory the next few days, until after seven steps in the development of the rumor had been authenticated, it was a matter of common knowledge, so the Muslims said, that there was to be a massacre at the time of the celebration of the coming holy days. It is not enough for us to smile knowingly at the credulity of others. Actually, the process by which the group feeling, the we-feeling, develops with reference to the they-feeling is the very heart of all those rumor processes and processes of stereotype formation which get us out of communication with others.

The acceptance of such social roles is not necessarily a conscious process. The child early learns what kinds of tasks are assigned to what kinds of people. He finds groups of roles hanging together, as, for example, all the various masculine roles hang together and all the feminine roles hang together, and there are similarly clusters or groups of roles that have to do with membership in race, class, ethnic, and other groups. Part of the process of social stereotyping, which we all observe and deplore, is due to the fact that these roles have a high degree of uniformity. If, for example, a minority group is forced into certain activities, and these activities require certain roles, and with these certain psychological attitudes develop, the stereotyping of the group as having certain attributes is not necessarily sheer fantasy. It may be a result of the process which we have described.

I could personally wish that there were more research on the process by which such roles are assigned and the way in which they are understood. This can easily be observed when a new job opportunity develops or a new area is being exploited. For a while there is confusion, and then gradually the power system of the community expresses itself in the assignment of tasks to certain persons and the assignment of powers, privileges, and honors to certain individuals and groups.

Prescott Lecky has written interestingly about the psychology of self-consistency,[6] the process by which each individual develops a series of ideas regarding himself, which must, perforce, hang together. Whenever he is asked to undertake some new activity, the question consciously or half consciously arises: Is this the sort of thing that a person like me could do? Is this fitting and appropriate to myself? He may think: I wouldn't aspire to this, or I couldn't sink as low as that. Or he may feel: I'm just not the kind of person that could do this or that. The psychology of self-consistency has been developed by Lecky to a point of maintaining that each person has a coherent and well-organized system of images regarding himself. From this follows the idea that a serious strain arises if one finds oneself carrying out a role which is incompatible with the rest, or developing an image of oneself which is out of line with other images. Actually, I believe this clinical aspect of the matter of roles is in urgent need of being spelled out more fully for intergroup workers. It is easy to oversimplify the facts. Thus some group workers seem tempted to feel that it would be easily possible for most individuals to throw their stereotypes away, or to liquidate their arbitrary stereotyping of other persons or themselves. In point of fact, the development of the uniform group outlook is one of the main safety-guaranteeing processes which lonely frightened people have, and it must be handled with patience and skill. One frequently discovers a strain or confusion if the images of the self lack their familiar contours. From this viewpoint there is a serious clinical problem to be honestly faced whenever groups develop new relations towards one another. We find this sort of thing frequently after a meeting of a good will group of some sort, like the Fellowship of Reconciliation, or the summer conferences of the American Friends Service Committee. When the various members then go back to the old situations which are highly standardized in traditional terms of intergroup remoteness or even hostility, any sort of change will appear strange to our old companions, indeed incomprehensible and threatening. When the students at Teachers College studied by Tredwell Smith had overcome a very large share of their prejudice against Negroes and then had to live again in the communities from which they had come, they had to face the fact that their new attitudes led to misunderstanding and strain among their associates.[7] The same is involved whenever any individual undergoes a personality change involving an alteration in his picture of himself, or his picture of his relations to others. "What will they expect?" "How can they ever forgive?" "Will I be the same person that I have always been?" "Do I understand both them and myself well enough to hold my ground with both patience and generosity?"

I believe upon one point, however, that Lecky's view of the matter is a little too simple. He implies that any change whatever in the picture of the self will involve frustration and difficulty. There are, however, certain cases which we can all recognize in which we are under constant pressure to make certain change in order to be consistent with an expressed ideal, or in order to meet a social demand which we have hitherto failed to meet. In these cases, there may be actually an alteration in the self image, for the better. The inconsistency may be momentarily surprising or bizarre, but it may be gratifying nonetheless, since it seems to be moving in the right direction; and slowly, the old elements which made up the old familiar self may fade or disappear, allowing the new elements--the desirable elements--a favored part in the total. It is, of course, this sort of thing which constitutes the reeducation of personality.

I would like to stress the implications of this point for the understanding of changes in attitudes, on all sorts of public questions, including economic, political, racial, and religious matters. Such changes are still frequently described in terms of the traditional language of propaganda or group suggestibility. Actually, we have no evidence that sheer reiteration has any particular effect. Hundreds of thousands of commands to children to wipe their feet before they come in, or to adults not to throw cigarettes on the floor, may lead only to a hardened and permanent indifference. Propaganda, on the contrary, achieves its result not by repetition alone, but essentially by the methods of advertising, e.g., by setting up a picture of the self as being more successful, more adequate, and carrying more prestige in the community by buying this, smoking that, wearing the other thing; and in the same way, groups are constantly being pushed into competitive positions as living in the better residential districts, or going to the better churches, or having the best college education, or what not. Group competition, in other words, as well as individual competition, is constantly used on a small scale by local manufacturers, realty people, and so on. This kind of propaganda may be far more effective than the heavy political propaganda of radio and press. Where the heavy propaganda, as of the Hitler or McCarthy type, wins huge success, this is largely due to the inflation of self-regard and group feeling on the part of the little people, that is, the people who feel threatened and their status confused by some large, vague group which represents, they believe, a threat to them and which they cannot directly get at. Today the scapegoat may be the Catholics, tomorrow the Jews, the day after tomorrow the Negroes, and, of course, millionaires, labor leaders, college people, braintrusters, radicals, and thousands of other groups can be stereotyped in such a role. The point that I would mainly stress is that attitude change, whether through propaganda or any other agency, is not miraculously wrought by sheer repetition or by some strange perversity known as suggestibility. Attitude changes are motivated, they meet human needs; they spring from compelling human situations; and these human situations mostly have to do with group insecurity and frustration, with the misunderstandings which arise from a protective or self-insulating society where one feels rejected, deprived, frustrated, or disbarred from the best social participation.

From these processes of social isolation and rebuff and the corresponding pressure to find oneself one with the strong and the adequate in society, come the moralistic phases of these processes. There probably never was a persecution, a lynching, a public humiliation of any person, great or small, that did not bring among the beholders some sense of moral superiority, not merely having a laugh at the expense of those who are degraded, but rejoicing in the sense that one is not as other men are. You and I, with our treasured sense of oneness in the great religious tradition which has meant so much for human brotherhood from the times of the Mediterranean world to today, must reluctantly admit that in many studies it has been found that religiousness and moralism have actually played a part in intergroup persecution, in other words, that the process of pride in group membership easily spills over into a sense of moral solidarity. Floyd Allport long ago pointed out that that which we would be ashamed to do in humiliating another human being, if we were serving simply as individuals, we may be glad to do in the group, and actually proud to do--morally proud, I would say--when the individual can be held up as an enemy of the people and ourselves made one with the forces of society which are carrying out the act of condemnation. Morals, the inner sense of being right, is a very precarious guide in such cases, unless it is always checked against the touchstone of warmth and generosity of human feeling. There is, from this point of view, a profound difference between morals and moralism, between human rights, on the one hand, and the cliche, "it serves him right," on the other.

Again, a clinical view of this matter of group membership becomes necessary when one looks at the individual who has been rejected. Theodore Newcomb has made a convincing case to the effect that isolation, loss of communication with other human beings, is a primary factor in the causation of mental disorder and a primary token that the disorder has reached alarming proportions. As a matter of fact, psychotherapy consists to a very large degree of identifying those whom Moreno would call the isolates, and somehow giving them the sense that they are chosen for group membership and an opportunity to feel the joy of being themselves the choosers of their own companions. Perhaps there is a greater, a more intimate relation here between psychotherapy and group practice than we would ordinarily recognize. Perhaps more of the clinical in the social, and more of the social in the clinical approach.

I must add with all the emphasis of which I am capable that sheer appeals for intergroup good will are far less effective than positive goals for community action which can be shared by all groups. From India to Israel to Britain to American efforts in the fields of public health, education, and civic decency, it has become as clear as crystal that we can best learn good will not by exhortation but by group action towards goals which all our various groups are determined to achieve.

I will now ask you to imagine a little boy of seven, living in a suburb of Boston, through which the Boston and Maine Railway ran out to the west. On one side of the railway lived those with Anglo-Saxon names. These were Republicans, Protestants, and commuters to Boston. On the other side of the railroad tracks lived those with Irish names, predominantly Democrats, Catholics, and non-commuters. Imagine the little boy's name to be Murphy, though of a Protestant and a commuting background, complicated by the fact that his father was a Democrat. You will immediately begin to understand that problems of minority group membership cannot all be described in a few words. Here, with residence among the majority group, with classification in two respects with the majority group, there was nevertheless an enormous affinity based on name and ethnic considerations, and much confusion during the critical years of the elementary school. This was carried to another community, and it was a matter of years before the issue was sweated out. There was a chance to observe, during those years, all sorts of different minority-group problems, some relatively easily borne, some, such as those of the Negro group, almost unbearable, and, in fact, occasionally breaking the back of some boy or girl, though most individuals somehow managed with patience and humor to fight their way through to a dignity and a place of respect in their own eyes and those of others.

If we will look at minority-group problems in terms of the issues which I have tried to sketch out, you will feel, I think, that the following points can all be brought into relation to the problem. First, the fact that one has to find strength in the early group relationships, and has to find oneself one with the group, in order to be a strong individual standing on one's own feet; and that this group membership may often be the very factor which later leads to the experience of collective rejection. Second, from this group membership follows the matter of social roles and the consistency in which the roles are to be carried out. Third, from this, likewise, follows the process of fundamental self-justification and group-justification which make each little humiliation a humiliation of the whole group to which one belongs, and leads, therefore, to the development of that ambivalence towards the majority group in which one both longs to be a member of the group and, at the same time, hates the group with the collective intensities of childhood group feeling.

Again, I would like to illustrate from the Hindus and Moslems of India. The Moslems, today, a minority in contemporary India, feel intensely one with their co-religionists of the new state of Pakistan, feel intensely that as a minority group in India, they can never receive their rights or a recognition of their culture. Their situation is almost by definition the one of minority-group hostility and a sense of persecution. The roles which they enact are, to a large degree, roles which come traditionally with their being Moslems, or are new roles imposed by their minority-group position of protest.

Yet, even here, one finds the point which I tried to stress, the enormous individual variability in response. Although the collective situation of the Moslems is precarious and their collective responses intensely hostile, we found over and over again in samples of Moslems, about 20 per cent who were without any intergroup hostility, people who took the position that there are good and bad in all groups, friendly and hostile in all groups, that no cultural group has any ultimate rightness as against any other group, that the fundamental problems are long-range problems of understanding and good will. There is, in other words, that individuality of response, that freedom from group stereotypes, even here among the uneducated village people of India, that we found also in some of the urban samples which I described.

Now what is the basis for this individual tolerance? I wish we knew. It would appear, from the present data, that the answer is again a clinical one, namely, that warmth of mothering, acceptance during the early years, freedom from violent and coercive discipline, a sense that one really belongs and has a place in the family, all contribute to an ability to accept other groups. The fact that one's own stance is secure means that one can give freedom of motion to other persons as well.

There is one other factor about minority-group membership which, I think, is almost always overlooked. That is the enormous creative role which minorities can play in making clear to majorities the inadequacies and incompleteness of their own culture. They may, of course, pay a price for this, as the Jews have had to pay over and over again through their literature of protest, their music and drama and science which have over and over again shown the non-Jew the fissures and cracks, the weak spots and inadequacies of the predominant Christian civilization of the West. It is often the minority group who, by living its own life, looking through its own eyes, can see what is healthy and unhealthy in the life of the larger group. The Negro, as he has become more and more articulate in recent decades, has also been more and more effective through his music, through his drama, through his folklore, as well as through the achievements of individual Negroes, of far-reaching social contributions. More and more, it has come to mean to the white man, as he looks through the Negro's eyes, not merely the recognition of an injustice here and there, but the recognition of a basic inadequacy and self-contradiction in the Christian civilization of which he is the most obvious exponent. I believe we could go right through the line and show that diversity is always useful in the correction of monolithic stupidities, and that minority groups can play their outstanding part by virtue of the very fact that some detachment and suffering is involved in their position.

It was the genius of Kurt Lewin to see that all of these types of interdependence of persons upon one another and upon social structure could be the subject of systematic experimental study. I have time here only for a few examples of the experimental program which he initiated. First, about the question of experimentation upon the very processes of group cohesion. During the war, the housewives of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, showed repeatedly their willingness to help win the war by buying and serving various kinds of foods which they did not like, but which had to be used in order to free other foods for the armed forces. Take the matter of the glandular cuts of meat which most people dislike. When a nutritionist explained to them how to prepare these, they agreed that they would try the experiment. A quiet follow-up study showed, nevertheless, that after two weeks none had made the attempt. Another method was now tried, under Lewin's direction. Instead of having the nutritionist give a lecture, there was simply the raising of the problem and the housewives allowed to work this through in their own way. The nutritionist simply sat in the corner as a resource person. The women reached their group decision that they wished to buy and serve these cuts of meat. Two weeks later, a quiet public opinion study showed that actually many of them had initiated this new and rather daring practice. The fact that it was their group decision made them committed, not as individuals, but as members of the group.

You have all seen this sort of thing, over and over again. We make an individual decision, and it collapses under stress; but in the group we stand firm. In the same way, those who are trained in the Gandhi schools in India, revolutionary in their basic difference from other educational institutions, cannot as individuals start new Gandhi schools in their own villages because it is known that human nature is too weak and will yield to tradition. They are sent out like the ancient apostles or like the modern Sisters of Mercy by two's, so that when the two are subjected to group criticism, they will stand together. Many a group worker has found this principle in his or her own life.

Another illustration from Lewin, actually his pupil, Alex Bavelas: When women textile operatives were induced to make a greater effort to make more cloth during the war, it was found that the effective problem was not to produce individual persuasion, but to turn over to the group, as a group, the problem of how much they wished to produce. After a half hour's discussion, they launched forth on their new program and produced far more than they had ever produced before, and this continued throughout the whole term of the study. Over and over again, one finds that a group decision clinches a matter which an individual resolution cannot clinch.

If group decision can do more than individual decision, this raises the question whether there may not really be such a thing as group creativeness, whether there may not be a release of personality in the group greater than that which ever occurs in the individual. Students of the history of the arts tell us that over and over again this has happened. In Italian Renaissance painting, in the Viennese music of the early nineteenth century, a group morale, a group creativity, has developed in which each individual can share. The individual has to have his ability to move away into his own retreat, but, then, as William Hocking has shown, the force of his return into the group again, the intensity of his desire to communicate with his fellows, like Zarathustra returning from the wilderness to his people, like Jesus returning from the desert or the mountains to preach to the multitudes, shows that it is actually through the electrifying effect of group participation that individual creativeness achieves its peak.

This, however, can be true only if each individual in the group has his own periods of isolation, his own chance to develop individuality. If we are to achieve democratic group work, rather than crowd or mob behavior, we need to have recognition of individuality and long periods of genuine quiet and isolation, in order that the return to the social may be more intense and satisfying.

To summarize--I have tried to make eight points: First, that membership in the social group is a central part of personality and can be changed constructively only through patience and skill.

Second, that warm in-group feeling, far from causing hostility, can lead into the appreciation and enjoyment of out-groups as well.

Third, that group membership means the understanding of social roles, and consequently that we must understand the way in which the individual views such social roles if we are to alter the prevailing intergroup relations.

Fourth, that attitudes do not arise from sheer repetition of slogans or propaganda, but from human needs, especially the need for status, and consequently it is only by studying human needs that we can deal with social attitudes.

Fifth, that minority groups add much to the richness of our civilization and to the perspective with which the majority group views its problems.

Sixth, that research can profoundly improve the quality of interpersonal and intergroup relations.

Seventh, that the discovery of group goals can powerfully draw social groups together.

And, eighth, that cutting across every generalization about intergroup relations and personality, there are profound individual differences, which can only be understood through an intimate study of individual character.

THE STATUS OF RESEARCH IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS: RECENT TRENDS AND PRESENT NEEDS

Robin M. Williams, Jr.

Introduction

In view of the discussion of this afternoon concerning practitioners and research people, one introductory remark seems in order. For many years I have struggled with research problems and have watched my colleagues do the same. I have also observed the efforts of practitioners in this exceedingly complex field, and have even tried a little "practice" from time to time on my own account. Remembering these experiences, I fervently hope that my sympathy for you is at least equalled by your sympathy for me as I try to summarize and evaluate recent developments in research on intergroup relations.

Two comments by way of acknowledgments are intially necessary here. One is that this paper is in large part the product of help given by my associates in the Cornell Intergroup Studies: John P. Dean, Lois Dean, Robert B. Johnson, Pauline Moller, and Alex Rosen. The second point is that most of the material for this review was originally prepared for a conference on research in human relations, sponsored by the Rockefeller Foundation, in January, 1953. The present remarks represent an abridgment of that review, with the addition of some later reflections on more recent research.

The output of research is now so great that a review and assessment is really called for every year or two. The present paper is largely confined to work done since 1947, but so many studies have appeared since that time that this has to be an extremely sketchy review.

In the interest of brevity, this paper will largely pass over the earlier appraisals by Rose and Williams, in order to focus more intensively upon developments during the past five years. This presentation is organized under the following topical headings:

I. Comparative studies
II. Behavior of minorities
III. Situational analysis
IV. Social perception, personality, and prejudice
V. Intergroup contact and interaction

Before examining each of these items in turn, let us look at certain broad trends in research which seem to cut across a wide variety of the special subject-matter fields.

In sheer volume of published work, the leading research area during the period under review was that of the relation between personality and "prejudice." At the same time, perhaps the most prominent shift in research emphasis has been the increased interest in patterns of discrimination (or differential behavior) as over against individual attitudes (stereotypes, antipathies, and so on). From the 1920's into the late 1940's we had had a large number of studies which attempted to describe individuals' stereotypes of racial and cultural groupings, their feelings of social distance, their expressions of liking and disliking. From such studies we have learned many useful things about the distribution of prejudice in various segments of the population and about the objects of positive or negative group categorizing. However, the great majority of the studies were too static and sheerly descriptive, and they tended to treat "prejudice" as an unanalyzed aggregate of individual attitudes, divorced from the functioning of real personalities, and from enduring social relations, and from the structural properties of groups and communities. A trend away from these much-ciritieized orientations was already discernible at the close of World War II and has continued since that time.

Reorientation has proceeded in several main directions. First of all, attention has more and more turned toward the study of actual intergroup contacts and relationships, rather than of prejudices treated in isolation from these relations. Secondly, considerable effort has been devoted to "action research" (or research on action), concerned with the effects of various types of purposive action aimed at changes in the attitudes or behavior of individuals and groups. Third, comparative or cross-cultural studies have re-emphasized the potential fruitfulness of closer examination of "experiments of nature." Another area of research contributing to what we might call the relational emphasis deals with the behavior and attitudes of minority-group members, and the patterns of interaction within and among ethnic, racial, and religious minorities. Fourth, we have witnessed increasingly sharp awareness of the wide variability of attitudes and behavior in different social situations--an awareness that is beginning to evoke interesting new research approaches. Finally, more systematic and detailed attention is being directed to the actual role of power in intergroup relations, as influence works through established channels of social structure--or creates new channels.

In the beginning, it is perhaps not too much to say that, above all, we need studies of changes in intergroup relations, for it is through analysis of change under optimal conditions of having control of, or knowing the values of, the relevant variables that we can most clearly see relations of cause and effect. For purposes of action, such analyses need to be strongly supplemented by systematic appraisal of the accessibility to manipulation of the main variables shown to be important by causal analysis. Such assessment is currently highly inferential, and the existing data are largely derived from fragmentary observations of varying reliability and validity. But purposively to change something, wisely, we need to know more than that a certain antecedent-consequent relation exists; we require also an estimate of the degree to which the causal factors actually can be changed; as well as a notion of the magnitude of the effects.

With this brief preview, let us turn to the more specific review and evaluation of work in this field.

Comparative Studies

A recently increased research interest in racial and cultural relations in societies other than our own[2] arises partly from urgent international problems and partly from strictly scientific interests. Social scientists have become more and more concerned to insure that their methods and their generalizations are not too closely culture-bound and localized in time and place.

Logically, the comparative method is an approximation to experimental design and would therefore seem to constitute an especially productive approach to the complex problems of race and culture. In actual practice, the contribution of cross-cultural studies in this field, although substantial, seems less than might have been expected. One reason may be that most American community studies and most studies of other cultures have really been individual "case studies." Each piece of research typically deals with a "sample" of one case--a community, a tribe, a village. Such work has been invaluable in extending our perspective and in correcting culture-bound generalizations. We are able in a rough way to contrast polyglot Hawaii or the interracial culture of Brazil[3] with South Africa[4] or Mississippi. We have been shown that groups of different race and culture can interact for long periods without conflict while retaining their separate identities.[5] Nevertheless, because the separate studies have used different research methods and concepts, it is difficult to make exact comparisons of the data. In the writer's opinion such problems can be solved, and it is a fact that systematic work is already under way to attack these methodological barriers.

It has been copiously documented that the contact and intermingling of different racial or cultural groups may or may not eventuate in conflict, or assimilation, or subordination of one grouping to another. That this apparently obvious finding is not always obvious is indicated by the many examples of political and administrative action based upon unwarranted generalities in this regard. To cite one example, the idea that even initially friendly intercultural contact tends to lead to increased understanding coupled with increasingly favorable attitudes is reflected in various contemporary programs involving international visits, exchange of students, and the like. That "ambassadors" of this type do not always react in the manner hoped for is perhaps no surprise to students of race and culture conflict.

A second case in point is the prevalence of the idea that ethnic assimilation is a kind of "natural" or "inevitable" outcome of extended intercultural contact. Yet we know that distinct ethnic groups may live together in close contact for long periods without any really important borrowing or assimilation.[6] Also, there are new indications that rather complete overt assimilation may overlay the subtle retention of many of the characteristics of the original culture.[7] The melting pot does not always work. For example, Munch gives a careful description of the processes by which the original culture is defended against assimilation, in the case of certain rural Norwegian groupings in Wisconsin, and makes the very important point that cultural assimilation does not necessarily bring social assimilation.[8] The latter point has been theoretically developed by Milton Gordon, who makes a convincing case for viewing our social structure as segmented or compartmentalized into relatively closed groupings defined by a combination of ethnic, racial, religious, class, and residence factors.

Comparative studies of different societies have underlined the great importance of the analysis of these structural problems.[9] Research at this level deals with true group-properties, ". . . the forms that the interrelated activities of individuals take, not simply the activities of separate individuals."[10] As we shall have occasion to discuss later in this paper, the psychological and social processes involved in race and culture relations appear to be broadly the same as in any other types of human relations. The distinctive criteria which mark off the unique features of racial and cultural relations, as traditionally delimited, are mainly structural, e.g., the fact that ascribed statuses are involved, that social categories are utilized to define membership and reference groups for the acting individual, and that continuity and depth and permanence of personal commitment flow from socially shared expectations centered upon such categorical definitions of individuals.

One of the more encouraging signs of progress toward maturity and clarity in this field is the growing emancipation from those "atomistic" studies which treated the members of different cultural and racial groupings as mere aggregates of individuals.[11] For all their shortcomings, it has been one of the great virtues of community studies that they have discerned and highlighted the basic fact that race and cultural relations are relations--that there is organization, recurrence, continuity, pattern, and interrelatedness in the personal interactions and correlative sentiments of the individuals who occupy culturally-stylized roles in the community.

Insofar as we are concerned with groups and cultures (rather than individuals studied in isolation from these contexts), we must be concerned with comparisons which will bring out patterns as well as item-by-item relations. For instance, the current Cornell studies have collected data from approximately 250 cities in the United States; the survey contains data on the type and degree of intergroup segregation and discrimination, the size of minority populations, the level of intergroup tension, and a series of related variables. From these materials, currently under analysis, we hope it will be possible to derive pattern-comparisons on a large number of factors.

Research on the Behavior of "Minority Groups"

Social scientists working in the diverse and pluralistic society of the United States have long been sensitive to the complicated criss-crossing of relations among those ethnic and racial segments which are themselves "minorities" in the culture as a whole. As nationality groupings have gradually lost much of their former importance, attention has turned to racial aggregates and still more recently to relations among Catholics, Protestants, and Jews.[12]

The situations and behaviors of minorities may be categorized under three main headings: (1) degree and kind of intergroup communication and interaction with (a) other minorities, (b) the dominant majority group; (2) attitudes and personality characteristics resulting from minority status; (3) internal differentiation of the minority population.

The communication and interaction of any "minority" racial or cultural grouping with the dominant group is, of course, one pole of a two-sided relationship. What, looked at from one pole, is a "stimulus" becomes a "response" from the other. This was very clear to some earlier students of race relations, notably Park, but has tended to be obscured in the present generation by the focus upon "majority prejudice," although everything we know about human social behavior points to its inherently reciprocal nature. If we do have recognizably differing groups and cultures, a certain kind of "ethnocentrism" (in the sense of positive identification and loyalty) is inevitable if there is to be any social solidarity at all. These very general considerations, however, need to be refined and specified by more rigorous and objective research.

The presence of interminority prejudices and conflicts continues to be noted and described--from the Durban riots to Harlem's anti-Semitism, or the attitudes of Seattle high school students.[13] It still remains true, however, that we need much further analysis of the conditions producing such divergent patterns as interminority conflict, or alienation and withdrawal, or a common front against a superordinate majority.[14]

Certain purely descriptive data concerning minority reactions are of direct usefulness in considerations of social policy. Because of barriers to communication and understanding, the members and leaders of one racial or cultural group often do not actually know the aspirations and values of the other. For example, An American Dilemma[15] suggested that Negroes' aspirations were in reverse order of those attributed to them by Southern white people and that Negroes want the abolition of just those discriminatory patterns which whites are most willing to give up. A recent local study provides some confirmation.[16] Negroes in Columbus, Ohio, are shown to object most strongly to legal and economic discrimination and then in descending order to discrimination in political life, public services and facilities, "social" courtesies and respect, and last of all, sex relations.

The depth and intensity of minority-group reactions to suppression, deprivation, and "tolerance" has been repeatedly documented during the period under review. Also, further evidence has been accumulated as to the nature and sources of self-rejection or "self-hatred" among minority-group members.[17]

The notion that persons in particular racial and cultural categories are internally homogeneous is, of course, belied by every serious piece of research we can find.[18] In their internal complexity, our minority groupings are at one with the remarkable pluralism of American society in many other respects. One of the more important insights which have emerged from close attention to the actual behavior of minority-group members is the sharp differentiation in modes of response to the pressure of dominant outgroups. A major line of useful research lies in the further specification and explanation of variations in just such differentiation. The world-wide relevance of additional knowledge on this matter is suggested by such diverse cases as the role of Eurasians in India, the Turkic Mohammedans in the Soviet Union, the Westernized civil servants in Indonesia.[19]

Social Perception, Personality, and Prejudice

In the years since World War II, probably the most prominent single research interest directly related to race and culture relations has been in the exploration of the connections between "prejudice" and various psychological processes and personality characteristics. Many studies are reported, and the cumulative findings represent substantial progress.[20]

New light has been thrown upon the development of concepts, stereotypes, and intergroup attitudes in young children. It seemed clear in 1946 from general theory and from available studies that young children did not manifest prejudice: the notion of instinctive aversion had been effectively shattered; we knew prejudice to be a learned response; we knew that the elaboration of concepts requires extensive learning. We still know all these things, but recent studies have shown outgroup-rejection responses and surprisingly definite stereotypes even at nursery school and kindergarten levels.[21]

An essential point is that all perception is selective and that this selectivity is in part determined by the actor's interests, needs, values, and capacities.[22] Both the actor's immediate "needs" and his cultural frame for perceiving are involved. In the case of "social perception" of other human beings, the cultural definition is of paramount importance. It is for this reason that the so-called stereotypes of ethnic, racial, and religious groupings are of such great interest to the student of social cleavage and social integration. What is perceived is organized by expectations. When these expectations are in terms of named classes of persons we may speak of "categorical perception." In the processes of identifying and characterizing other persons, all human relations are affected by the mixtures of understanding, non-understanding, and misunderstanding which both experience and social psychological theory lead us to expect.[23]

It seems likely that this is a subject on which we can expect material clarification from experimental work in the general psychology of perception. We have just now arrived at the point at which the whole problem of social perception could be sensibly formulated, and even visualized in a form susceptible to operational research attack. It is likely that in the next few years rather important new developments will occur, both at observational and experimental levels.

One other point seems basic here. It is commonly, and tacitly, assumed that the verbal indorsement of stereotyped statements about racial and cultural groupings represents "real prejudice," or at least, a "real attitude." Much further investigation remains to be done, however, to determine the actual meaning of stereotypes to the persons who subscribe to them, and especially the salience of stereotypes and the intensity of commitment to them. Thus, we have had the pointed challenge of a British study of national and racial stereotypes which asserts:

> It has generally been assumed that stereotyped replies to questions on "national characteristics" indicate stereotyped thinking on the part of the respondents; our results suggest per contra that the majority of respondents have no particular views on the subject at all, and are perfectly aware of the fact that any replies they can make are merely the result of cultural and social indoctrination. In other words, the results of studies of this kind are predetermined by the methodology used; when we look for stereotyped views, and give the subject no chance to reply in any non-stereotyped fashion, we should not be surprised that the answer we get is a stereotyped one. . . .[24]

Turning to other developments in the social psychology of intergroup relations, we may first note a major shift in research interest. Although the long-popular "attitude studies" continue to appear, an apparently increasing proportion utilize sophisticated methods, and are less concerned with the straight reporting of mass attitudes than with the relation of particular opinions ("attitudes") to personality, on the one hand, and to interpersonal behavior on the other.

From many sources, there has developed the notion that "prejudice" can not be expected to be a completely separate compartment of the total personality. Research had shown that prejudices were intercorrelated: the person who expressed antipathy toward or indorsed stereotypes of one racial, ethnic, or religious grouping tended to show similar reactions to all types of persons not in his own membership group.[25]

The general portrait of the prejudiced personality emerging from the series of studies at the University of California[26] is well known: persons most prejudiced against ethnic, religious, and racial minorities are reported to manifest "conventionalized" social conformity with deep ambivalence toward social norms and the authorities enforcing them, a puritanical conscience, repressed hostility toward parents, admiration of power and strength, advocacy of severe punishment, status-anxiety, repressed sexuality, a rigidly dichotomous style of thinking, a tendency to distrust other people and to view the world as evil and dangerous.[27]

The first type of impact of the California studies was to give impetus to partial replications. Many investigators seized upon items for the various "scales" used. Himmelhoch[28] showed that some of the main California findings held even in a highly tolerant population. Among studies following the lead of the California group were several investigations of chilren's ethnic attitudes which have shown broadly similar results.[29]

These findings, as all others, depend upon the authenticity of the indices used. A beginning has been made in the testing of the California scales for validity.[30]

Other studies of personality factors have dealt with the role of frustration in evoking hostile or aggressive attitudes and behaviors.[31] We still have to resolve the results of studies which demonstrate that frustration is followed by aggression[32] with those which indicate that the frustration --> "scapegoat" formula is inadequate. It is surely clear that not all blockage or frustration of goal-directed behavior is followed by aggression, nor by "displacement" of aggressive sets toward substitute objects. On the theoretical side, also, credible objections to the scapegoat notion have been raised.[33] The idea that minority groups are "scapegoats" leaves several crucial questions unanswered: why only one of several minorities may be selected as the object of aggression; why the intensity of hostility varies greatly toward different minorities; why some minorities are objects of aggression but are respected, whereas others are despised; why minority groups are prejudiced against a realistically frustrating majority group rather than some other accessible group.

Future research concerning the role of hostility in racial and cultural conflict may find it profitable to re-examine certain basic hypotheses. For example, the writer now thinks that his 1947 monograph considerably overemphasized the importance of hostility in intergroup relations. Experience in a series of studies in American communities indicated that much discrimination is not predicated upon hostile feelings, and that aggressive intergroup behavior on the part of the majority group people appeared most often to be a reaction to a threatening change in status or relationships considered to be normal. Even when more-or-less continuous hostility can be demonstrated, it does not follow that we can accept a "hydraulic" model of personality which assumes a store of suppressed hostility awaiting release.

Hypotheses concerning the sources of aggression have been only part of the research picture in the area of present interest. Two terms have become especially popular in the literature dealing with the relation between prejudice and other aspects of personality: "rigidity" and "intolerance of ambiguity."

Researches of K. Goldstein, Rokeach, Block and Block, Lindzey, and others have suggested that within a given socio-cultural situation both generalized "rigidity" of personality (in the special sense of persistence of previously learned, standardized patterns of action and belief) and outgroup stereotypes are partial functions of an incapacity of the individual to deal with a problematic situation except by known solutions. That is, speaking figuratively, a poverty of personal resources seems to be an important factor leading to constricted and repetitive perceptions and actions.[35]

Results consistent with those just reviewed have come from studies of what we are loosely calling "social perception." Lindzey and Rogolsky[36] have verified findings previously reported by other investigators that persons high in prejudice are more likely to "see" the object of their prejudice. On the other hand, as Seeleman[37] had shown earlier, the ability to recognize individual Negro faces varies inversely with prejudice against Negroes. Thus, the prejudiced person is highly sensitive to category-membership but insensitive to variations within it.

It is immediately apparent that one of the important questions concerning the studies in the mold of those reported in The Authoritarian Personality is whether the intercorrelation of prejudices toward various minorities represents a relatively fixed cluster derived from basic personality dynamics, or whether it exists only in a particular type of cultural context. For example, does ethnocentrism retain its generalized quality in a culture in which there is a dominant institutionalization of discrimination with reference to one minority--as in South Africa or the American South?

On the question of the association between prejudice and personality characteristics, the results thus far published are to the effect that ethnocentrism, as revealed by explicit testimony, correlates positively with the "authoritarian" profile of personality characteristics.

Efforts to explain race and cultural relations by the structure and dynamics of individual personalities are persistent. And this approach is persistently countered by students who point out that this is only one, and not always the most important, aspect of the problem.[38] We do need, however, to break down the insular models which deal with personality and ignore groups, institutional frameworks, and culture content.

Fortunately, it is possible to report that many of our colleagues are not only aware of these basic problems, but also are engaged in empirical studies which tend to substantiate further the best theoretical orientations we have. The beginnings of the necessary job of relating personality-and-social-context to prejudice are well under way.[39]

Along with such pilot explorations, we have witnessed sharp questioning of the idea that prejudice in the main simply reflects a unitary personality structure. It is suggested that much intergroup prejudice may not be "hostility" or "hatred," nor a product of personality maladjustment, nor lack of information, nor distorted views of reality. Rather, what is often termed "prejudice" may be a response to a system of shared, interlocking, socially axiomatic expectations and values: "What is over-looked is that widespread anti-Negro reactions are not necessarily individual personality problems but rather may be institutionalized and culturally accepted social patterns."[40]

Out of these considerations, it is the present view that an important area of opportunity for new knowledge lies in the study of the behavior derived from different modes of personality organization in systematically varied situations. After all, our practical interest is ultimately not so much in the attitudes of abstracted personality systems as it is in "normal" personalities behaving in certain types of situations.

Furthermore, the "prejudice of conformity" is not necessarily the active, rigidly categorical hostility of the emotionally-disturbed bigot. It is quite likely that the "bigot" in certain Deep South communities often may be in a straightforward sense, less "neurotic" than the racial liberal in that setting. Some evidence consistent with this possibility is already available.[41] Furthermore, there are fragments of data indicating that the extreme liberal and the extreme bigot may be rather alike in personality characteristics, and quite different from persons holding more moderate positions on racial and cultural issues.[42]

These considerations point clearly to the need for research specifying the functional role of prejudice in the total dynamics of personality-in-social-setting.[43] Such studies should base themselves squarely upon our existing general knowledge, which, after all, is not wholly trivial.

We stand in need of studies which will locate prejudiced and nonprejudiced, authoritarian and nonauthoritarian personalities in the various portions of the community or of other social structures. The current Cornell studies find that the persons manifesting most extreme prejudice are relatively uneducated, past middle age, and of low socioeconomic status. Obviously the total situation would be very different were the "bigots" to be found concentrated in positions of leadership and power.[44]

In summary, our primary needs, as we have sensed them in our operations with respect to personality and prejudice, are all familiar--and pressing:

1. The careful study of the relation of personality (as indexed by tests and interviews) AND prejudice (as indexed by tests and interviews) to personality and prejudice in emotionally-involved behavior in real-life situations, or in controlled situations approaching a similar degree of psychological reality and level of tangible and enduring social consequences.

2. The comparative study of personality characteristics as related to prejudice in different social environments.

3. The mapping of prejudice in different portions of community structure--above all, with respect to power and communicative influence.

4. The controlled observation of change in prejudice and discrimination.

Studies of Situational Variations in Behavior and Attitudes

In the intergroup relations field we have long been aware of the important role that the immediate situation plays in determining the behavior of the individual. Nevertheless, most research in this field has not given adequate attention to the situational aspects of behavior. Most attitude research has stopped with the study of how attitudes operate in interview situations and has not gone on to study how they operate in actual intergroup situations. And most research on patterns of behavior has stopped with the documentation of discriminatory behavior, but has not gone on to relate these behaviors to the attitudes of the particular people involved.

However, it has been recognized for a long time that there is extremely wide variation in the degree to which research-elicited behaviors "correspond" to other relevant behaviors of the persons studied. In the special field of intergroup attitudes, the problem has been considered by LaPiere, Merton, Jahoda, Sherif, Myrdal, Rose, John Dollard, Gerhart Saenger, and many others. In the current Cornell studies, it has been possible to amass a considerable body of systematic observations in real community contexts, showing instances of seemingly "inconsistent" behavior. For example, a restaurant proprietor testifies in vigorous terms that he does not and will not accept Negro patrons. On the following day a Negro member of the field staff enters the establishment, and is served with promptness and cordiality.[45] We now have abundant evidence of situational variability, and this is a major achievement, but it is not enough.[46] It is time to leave the A-B-C level of description and move into the systematic investigation of the conditions under which attitudes and action are or are not consistent or stable.[47]

As an example of the kind of hypotheses which might be subjected to this systematic testing we may cite Donald Pierson's conclusion from a study of racial stiuations in Brazil that a crucial factor in active prejudice is ". . . a feeling, on the part of the members of a dominant group, that they are under threat of displacement from an established social position."[48] Within the United States, the Cornell studies reveal the existence of quite substantial differences in behavior patterns or established operating practices, between areas having about the same incidence of prejudice and sharing the same general culture. Variation in discrimination and segregation with regard to the Negro not only is great as between one community and another, even within the same region, but is likewise found from one situation to another within a given community. What to the outside observer may appear as anomalies of practice seem to be taken for granted and not felt as inconsistent by the local majority-group population. It is our impression that these variations in practice do often afford points of leverage for social change.

It appears, for instance, that one of the most basic changes in race relations in the South is just the growing uncertainty of all concerned as to what is the appropriate, "proper" intergroup behavior.[49] This, along with the decreased personal interaction between whites and Negroes, is creating an unprecedented situation in which further changes can occur with a rapidity that would have been thought impossible only a few years ago.

The analysis of relatively unpatterned situations is of great potential importance, both for social practice and for social science. We have found that people's responses to hypothetical situations are patterned in the same way as ordinary opinion-items--for example, they can be ordered into unidimentional scales. But behavior we have studied in actual intergroup situations has not proved scalable.

Interaction of Racial and Cultural Groupings

Evidence that intergroup contacts of certain kinds are powerful solvents of prejudice has been available for some time; yet it is also known that in certain cases, interaction seems to sharpen prejudice and to increase the probability of conflict.[50] During the past five years the problem has been more clearly formulated and valuable data have been assembled.

Researches on the effects of interracial and intercultural interaction have largely concentrated upon formalized social situations in which there is a measure of authoritative control over the behavior of the interacting persons--military organizations, public housing projects, factories, boys' camps. The direct study of interactional patterns, as reported in recent publications, has been confined to areas outside the South.[51] Within the limits of such coverage, however, there is high consistency in the findings with regard to Negro-white interaction. In the Army,[52] in the Merchant Marine,[53] in governmental organizations,[54] in housing projects,[55] the studies show that integration of whites and Negroes in situations of social interaction is accompanied and followed by an overall reduction in the prejudices of white people toward Negroes. Although a portion of the white population does not change in attitude and although some become more negatively inclined, the net effect is typically found to be "positive."

This conclusion decisively refutes widely-held common-sense assumptions, and is clearly of great practical importance. The essential scientific problem here, however, concerns what variables, and relations among them, may be used to explain the different outcomes of different kinds of interaction in various types of situations. Existing studies already go a considerable way toward enabling us to establish predictive generalizations.[56]

The current Cornell studies show a direct relation between in-group isolation and prejudice: the more an individual engages in personal interaction with persons of different race, religion, or nationality background, the lower is his general level of prejudice. This result has been confirmed in 14 different samples, involving about 6,000 persons. We find in the communities studied that the more possibilities of cross-group interaction there are, the more interaction actually occurs; the more actual contact there is, the higher the frequency of intergroup friendships; the more intergroup friendships, the less the incidence of stereotyping and categorical antipathy.

Social Change and Group Processes

We have already noted the very rapid rate of change in intergroup relations, not only in America but in many other areas of the world. In our own Southern states, a new condition is reflected in the rise of Negro voting, breaches in legal segregation, the increased participation of Negroes along with whites in community activities.[57] Some evidence of increased religious tensions appears at the same time that ethnic and racial stereotyping appears to be declining.[58] Such important societal developments could hardly fail to excite the research interests of social scientists.

It is therefore no paradox that in a period of the rediscovery of the small group and of rapid development of research upon small-group processes, we have had also a new emphasis upon patterns of social control which transcend immediately perceivable groups. Specifically, research interest has turned to the role in racial and cultural relations of legal action, of special-interest groupings, of formal organizations, of power relationships within and between communities, regions, and nations.[59]

The case for the effectiveness of legal action in changing intergroup relations has found an impressive list of supporters during the past decade. The older doctrines stressing the slowness of change in the mores and the ineffectiveness of legislation or regulation conflicting with customary practices have been under heavy assault for some time. Myrdal and associates[60] and Carey McWilliams[61] were early skeptics as to the "mores" doctrine. More recently, positive appraisals of the effectiveness of legislation have come from MacIver,[62] Rose,[63] Berger,[64] and others. A great deal more research and thinking will be necessary to identify and measure the conditions accounting for the varying effects of legislation and other authoritative controls. Nevertheless, current and prospective legal changes provide us with a massive "natural laboratory." Even if only rough control of the variables can be achieved, further research on this topic is a legitimate and useful line of endeavor.[65] Among the promising subtopics is the educative effects of legislation--effects that have often been ignored or misevaluated--and the types and degrees of resistance to new regulation.

Time limitations prevent summarizing here the very important work that has been done on the processes of basic attitude-change and how these are related to participation and involvement in groups.[66] The fundamental scientific importance, as well as the practical significance, of research dealing with the processes of attitude change is perhaps adequately suggested by two hypotheses already supported by a rather substantial body of attested findings:

1. Individuals who are both strongly supported by and identified with a specific social group will be especially amenable to changes accepted by that group.

2. Group unanimity and the shared awareness of attitude change serve powerfully to reinforce and crystallize the changed orientations of each individual member.

Insofar as these two propositions may be validated by further testing, we may conclude that piecemeal change is easiest to effect, but most difficult to stabilize. In that event, the practical dictum for social engineering would appear to be: if one is able and his values clearly sanction it, divide and persuade--and when change has occurred, recombine, and build an integral community.

ASSESSING THE TECHNIQUES FOR ACTION: MASS MEDIA OF COMMUNICATION, GROUP DYNAMICS, INTERGROUP CONTACT PROJECTS

Marc Vosk

Introduction

The basic question with which we are all concerned is that of change--change in opinion, in attitude, in individual behavior, in group behavior. There is thus, to my mind at least, one essential difference between our problem and those which usually confront the educator or teacher. Ours is the task of persuasion, of changing or overlaying, so to speak, a previously structured pattern of response. Those whom we wish to persuade do not come to us "to learn" (I am not now speaking of training workshops or associations of like-minded people). They have no wish to acquire new skills or new knowledge and certainly evince no desire to change their attitudes. In most cases, they do not come to us at all; it is we who must approach them, establish communication with them--through mass media or other means at our disposal.

When it comes to intergroup relations, such people often hold opinions and attitudes, perhaps behave, towards their neighbors in ways which most of us would consider undemocratic and tension-producing. Our problem, then, is to eliminate these old ways of response to intergroup contact and to substitute new forms, which to the best of our knowledge make for harmonious living. In some respects (the analogy will be familiar to those of you who use tape recorders), it resembles erasing an old sound track on a tape before substituting a new recording.

One additional remark by way of introduction--this morning, we are to examine the assumptions made in everyday intergroup relations work and evaluate the techniques of action used, in terms of existing research. Actually, the apparent dichotomy between assumptions and research is not so rigid as some would suppose. Ideally, today's findings should be tomorrow's assumptions. In practice, there is sometimes a time lag to be taken into account. Often, too, there is a problem in effective communication and persuasion. Practitioners or, for that matter, social scientists are not always more willing to give up long cherished forms of behavior than are the people they are themselves trying to influence. But, time lag, resistance, and all, research does influence assumptions, and some of the findings I mention have already acquired the status of "assumptions."

The Mass Media

Suppose, then, we consider some of the assumptions made--both explicit and implicit--when the mass media are used to communicate with the people we wish to influence.

The most obvious one is that mass media "reach" masses and hence, that a communication, whatever it may be, is heard, viewed, or read by great numbers of people, many times the number who could be reached by face-to-face contact. This assumption has its foundation in some well-known facts. The daily newspapers of our country reach nine out of ten adults in the population, the radio an even higher proportion. Comic books, alternately the bane and the boon of parents, are read (if that is what one does to comic books) by nine out of ten children. A single issue of LIFE magazine reaches more than a fifth of the adult population of the United States. Within the space of six weeks, some sixty million Americans see at least one issue of this magazine. Leading radio programs, Jack Benny or Amos and Andy, are heard by audiences of 17 or 18 million listeners, while the more popular TV programs, such as the Colgate Comedy Hour or "Your Show of Shows," are seen by even greater numbers; a recent count put the number at 28 million.[1]

Potentially, the audience indeed appears to be enormous. However, this optimistic appraisal needs some qualification. To begin with, research has shown that the potential audience for any message is reduced by a process of self-selection. By and large, people view, listen to, or read the kinds of propaganda to which they are favorably disposed beforehand.

People with convictions on any subject, political or social, tend to read the periodicals which reflect their views. Lazarsfeld reports that when a magazine or radio program carries a program setting forth the virtues of a minority group, a large proportion of the audience consists of the minority which is being praised. The intended targets of the message are usually conspicuous by their absence.[2]

There is, moreover, a certain overlap in audiences. People who have read a book tend to go to see the movie made from it. People who read serious literature listen to serious radio programs; those who go in for lighter fiction pick soap opera on radio or TV. Then there is the simple fact of prominence of display, which can insure the fact that a message will be seen, or heard. Generally speaking, the content of intergroup relations communications, even when prepared by experts, precludes their being featured in newspapers. On radio or television, the demands of commerce and audience appeal reserve the favored listening times for more entertaining programs than ours.

In effect, the peak audiences reached by the media to which the term mass applies, are attained only by specially popular programs or favored portions of newspapers. For other communications, the "masses" are considerably reduced in number.

A second and easily understandable assumption sometimes made in the use of mass media is that communications on these media can and do reduce prejudice or discrimination or both. In other words, such communications can bring about changes in individual or group behavior in the area of intergroup relations. Put so broadly, the assumption almost begs for a negative answer. Enough is known about the deep-seated nature of prejudice to question seriously the intended effect of mass media communication. Flowerman[3] and others have discussed some of the factors which reduce the effectiveness of mass propaganda against bigotry, such as lack of control of the media, the prevalence of anti-democratic propaganda, selective listening, the nature of the issues involved, and others. Yet, despite the operation of these factors, it would be idle to deny that mass media do have some effect upon public opinion and attitudes. The real question is what effect, upon whom, and under what conditions? Berelson's restatement of the broad assumption of communication effect: "Some kinds of communication on some kinds of issues, brought to the attention of some kinds of people under some kinds of conditions, have some kind of effect,"[4] suggests one kind of reformulation which would facilitate application of pertinent research findings.

Numerous earlier studies of propaganda pieces were concerned with the character of the specific message itself, its comprehensibility, and the measure of success it had in swaying its audience. Preoccupation with the varying degrees of effect achieved by the same or similar messages on different media is also manifest in many of these investigations. Movies, magazine and newspaper articles, cartoons, radio programs, car cards have all come in for their share of study. As a result of these separate investigations--many of which are undoubtedly familiar to you--a number of general principles have been enunciated which have had their effect not only upon the nature of propaganda output itself, but on the course of subsequent experimental study of the mass media. In more recent years, researchers have taken greater experimental notice of those situational and social factors within which the process of communication occurs.

It had for long been a matter of common experience that the conditions under which a message was heard or seen had a good deal to do with its effect. Somehow, though, this theoretical and practical knowledge had become obscured, partly by the day-to-day necessity of evaluation of particular pieces of propaganda. But the evaluation process itself only underlined once again the importance of more basic elements in the communication process. Take the example of a study made by our department some years ago of a propaganda film produced during the war by the Army Signal Corps.[5] The film pictures a young American stopping to listen to a street-corner demagogue attacking minority groups. Only when the speaker attacks the hero's own "minority" group, "the Masons," does he register dismay. A refugee professor, also present, then paints for our hero in a series of flashbacks to Germany the deadly parallel between Hitler's rise to power and the agitator's harangue.

Our study was designed to determine the effectiveness of the film. In the course of this evaluation, a number of important generalizable findings emerged. Among them, the influence of selective perception stands out. Messages beamed at particular groups--such as "Catholics are persecuted"--were most successful in reaching Catholics in the audience. The opposite effect, failure to perceive messages not specifically directed to "one's own group," was also present. Another interesting development was the fact that in an audience climate which favored reception of a particular message, it was apparently harder to change the "deviates." On the surface, this finding might appear to be at odds with the well-known influence of group climate upon change in individual members. Actually, there was at least one element in the experimental situation which differed from the usual "group" study. The audience was not readily identifiable as a "group." Deviant individuals may well have been members of groups to which they owed allegiance. But these were groups other than the immediate viewing audience, and undoubtedly had set norms of their own which supported the resistance of our deviants.

There have been many "effects" studies of particular propaganda pieces which shed additional light on more general problems of communication. Since our time limits make it impossible to go into detail, let me attempt, instead, to summarize for you some of the major findings which bear upon the assumptions we make:

1. People whose attitudes are initially more favorable to a message are more likely to retain its content than those whose initial attitudes are unfavorable. A recent study of the impact of anti-discrimination car cards, for example, demonstrated that the "tolerant" more frequently recalled the messages than the "prejudiced," and what is more important, more often attributed moral authority to them.[6] However, the so-called "sleeper effect" demonstrated by Hovland and his associates[7] seems to modify this generalization. Soldiers were shown an orientation film intended to improve their attitudes towards Great Britain. Some who saw the film showed no initial effect, but subsequently changed in a direction favorable to the communication at a later date. This change appears to have occurred most among those who were initially opposed to the film's message.

2. It is probably true that information provided by the mass media serves to reinforce attitudes of people already favorably disposed, and to provide the group sanctions which support the process of change in individuals whose opinions are initially opposed. Proof of this effect is difficult to obtain since measurement of a "social climate" is still in its infancy. Sometimes the evidence cited is a matter of placing a reasonable, even if not completely conclusive, interpretation upon related research findings. In the car card study it must be mentioned, for example, one in five "tolerant" viewers and one in eight so-called "straddlers" recalled the cards as carrying the force of moral authority. One could construe this finding as implying, for the former, reinforcement of, and for the latter, group sanction for, anti-discriminatory behavior.

3. There is a tendency on the part of targets of propaganda to evade the message of the propagandist, particularly if acceptance of the message makes it necessary for them to identify with an "objectionable" character.[8] Such devices as accepting the particular message but dismissing it as atypical or rejecting it by failure to understand it, by denial of its truth, are often used by the prejudiced to evade the necessity for change. The case of the prejudiced veteran in Bettelheim and Janowitz' study, who believed all Jews were cowards, is typical. Confronted with the fact that a Jew in his unit had received a Congressional award for bravery, he dismissed the evidence by distorting its meaning: "Oh him, he's kill-crazy."

4. People more readily accept specific than general messages, and more readily accept messages which are targeted at their own group. This has been demonstrated so frequently that it has become almost an axiom of intergroup work.

5. People more readily accept messages coming from prestige figures. Merton's analysis of Kate Smith's famous radio bond sales drive[9] is a case in point. However, this statement too needs some modification. In a recent study at Rutgers University, with which our department cooperated, it was found that so-called prestige figures had influence in limited areas.[10] A tolerance message from the President might be deemed appropriate, where a similar statement by a public figure who had no special relationship to intergroup problems might be dismissed as ridiculous. Similar distinctions, by the way, are drawn by children among the comic characters they admire. Bugs Bunny, say, could hardly be used to teach forebearance and patience.

6. People listen to, read, or view the mass media in differing group situations: TV with the family, comics with other children (some people are children). There is some evidence that the choice of media and of favored prestige figures, and even the interpretation placed upon messages, appears to be affected by this group situation. Differences in reactions to the same communication have been noted between children who relate primarily to their own peer groups and those for whom parents are a reference group. In the Rutgers study cited above, peer-group members used comic-book characters as everyday play activity material, and appeared to judge the media in terms of their use for group life. Non-members of peer-groups used the same animal and human heroes as raw material for phantasy or dreams.

7. A number of largely technical findings which are of some importance to the practitioner have also been made. These are, of course, familiar to most of you; they include such facts as that repeated presentation is more effective than single exposure, that a combined use of auditory and visual material is superior to either presentation by itself, that the more personal the medium the greater the effect, and others of similar import.

In general, it would appear to be a valid conclusion that mass media of communication can be effective in public opinion and attitude change. The crucial questions remain--under what conditions and with whom? Some answers are beginning to emerge from the accumulating experimental evidence. We can also safely affirm, I think, that with our limited access to the mass media, their use must be regarded as auxiliary, rather than as a primary means of effecting change. Used thus, as aids to the more personal methods developed in the field of intergroup relations, they merit the serious attention of both researchers and practitioner.

It is these more personal techniques which we must now examine in the light of research. Our evaluation, however, will not stress the problems raised by the employment of specific techniques such as role-playing, psychodrama, and the like, but rather the assessment of the group process itself as a method of inducing change.

Group Dynamics

It might be well to pause for a moment before plunging into the group dynamics sea to remind ourselves that the concept of the "group" and some of the related processes described by experimenters are not yet so securely anchored in empirical reality as we might wish them to be. There have been many instances in the history of science, of constructs which were later discarded in favor of simpler explanations of observed phenomena. Heat, for example, was regarded as a substance until molecular motion was discovered.

In defense of his preoccupation with group processes, Kurt Lewin warned social scientists against rigid insistence that the objects which they studied must have spatial existence. This warning appears now to be in need of tempering by equal caution against premature system-building. There is always a possibility that many of the phenomena we now regard as products of an almost magical "group process" may turn out to be as easily understood in terms of ordinary learning theory. Consider, for example, how, by assuming a "need for acceptance by significant others" in all individuals, the process of group influence upon change relates to orthodox learning theory. As you know, "needs" are thought of as dynamic forces impelling the individual toward learning.

Let me give one example only. In a recent experiment, Robert Bills found that two groups of students in psychology courses achieved significantly different objective ratings in their course, depending upon whether they agreed or disagreed with the values expressed by the instructor.[11] Here we have a result which is similar to the often-demonstrated influence of acceptance of group values upon individual change, operating on the level of inter-personal relationships and learning problems. That the two situations have elements in common (despite the predominantly factual content of the psychology courses) seems obvious enough. The decision as to which theoretical framework to apply is, it seems to me, still an open question.

However, to turn to our immediate problem. Just how shall we go about assessing the techniques of group dynamics used in the improvement of intergroup relations? Intensive and consistent use of such techniques is today confined largely to the training and re-education of individuals, chiefly teachers but also including others whose jobs or interests involve dealing with people. To a more limited extent, some of the techniques developed, such as group discussion, sociometry, role-playing, psychodrama, and much of the newly-acquired knowledge about group pressures toward conformity, about the role and function of group leaders, about the ways in which group norms are reinforced or changed, are being applied to school, church, Scout, adult-discussion, and other groups.

At first sight, there would appear to be two major areas in which we need to assess the techniques for change which have developed in the group field. The first is their efficacy in bringing about change in the individual. The second, their use in the field of intergroup relations proper, that is, relations between identifiable groups in our population, such as Jew and Gentile, Negro and white, Catholic and Protestant, Italian and Irish. Actually, since it is the immediate aim of human relations training schools where these techniques have been applied, to achieve changes in individuals rather than groups, most of the experimental work which exists relates directly to this first problem. Research involving the actual application of group processes to the relations between groups is still comparatively rare. Sherif's recently reported camping study which followed two groups of boys through the processes of group formation, identification, and belongingness, the development of group standards and values, and finally the actual experimental incitement of intergroup hostility with its attendant name-calling and stereotyping behavior,[12] is one of the few of its kind. Thrasher's[13] and Whyte's[14] well-known studies of gangs fall into this general area, but their applicability to problems of intergroup relations, is, on the whole, tangential rather than direct.

We are consequently limited to assessing the group process insofar as it effects changes in individuals. Presumably these individuals then proceed, in their roles as leaders or members of their own groups, to bring about parallel changes within these groups. This puts before us the task of determining first: (1) the degree to which group processes can and do effect change in the individual, and (2) the extent to which the changed individual retains, utilizes, and transmits his acquired skills and attitudes in his "back home" group.

Basic to any evaluation is a knowledge of the objectives and assumptions underlying the process under investigation. Often enough, these objectives and assumptions are themselves in need of clarification, "pinning-down" so to speak. Sometimes, the principal value derived from assessment is recognition of just this fact. However, we appear to be in a more fortunate position. In a number of recently published reviews of group training activities, both goals and assumptions have been clearly set forth. Let me list first those goals which are relevant to our present purpose:

1. To change basic self- and group-regarding attitudes in the direction of greater freedoms, permissiveness, democracy and away from authoritarianism.

2. To provide knowledge of the fundamental concepts of intergroup relations.

3. To develop leaders with greater sensitivities to diverse needs and values of groups and group members, and with competence and technical skills in group techniques and processes.

Underlying the methods used in attaining these objectives are the assumptions which we must attempt to evaluate:

First, that individual changes in attitudes, in behavior, in opinion, in sensitivity to the needs of others, can more effectively be brought about in a group situation, particularly in "highly valued" groups.

Second, that such change can more readily be induced in a group whose atmosphere or climate is democratic rather than authoritarian.

Third, that change is facilitated by active participation of leaders and members in the group process and in group problem-solving.

Fourth, that skills, and even more important, attitudes thus acquired will remain with the individual after he has left the training laboratory.

Fifth, that the trainee will in his turn be able to impart these skills and attitudes to the members of his "back home" group.

The evidence we have in support of these assumptions is of two kinds--experimental, chiefly from outside the training schools and workshops, and the evaluations made by the training centers themselves of their success in achieving their objectives. Let us look at this evidence.

Kurt Lewin's classic experiments on changing food habits during the war are, of course, familiar to all.[15] Subsequent studies carried out by Radke and others, also with food habits, all confirmed the superiority of the group decision method over the lecture or individual instruction methods. Not only was the group method superior in inducing change, but also in assuring retention of the new habit pattern after it was once formed. Coch and French used the group decision method to induce workers to accept technological changes in factory procedures. Resistance was overcome by group discussion.[16] Newcomb's demonstration of the pressures which the college community norms exerted upon Bennington students[17] is also often cited in support of group anchorage of attitudes and attitude changes. Marrow and French tell how they succeeded in changing a prevalent industry stereotype against older workers by involving top executives and later other employees in group fact-finding and discussion procedures.

Personal persuasion by experts with special knowledge of the field had previously failed.[18]

Then there are the extensive studies of Stouffer and his associates reported in The American Soldier[19] which offer additional evidence of group influence on attitudes. Among the many examples described in these studies is the finding that green troops or replacements tended to adopt attitudes towards combat and towards non-coms which were characteristic of the veteran units to which they were attached. Moreover, and this is perhaps even more significant, their "morale" also approximated that of their new units.

We know too, that the more highly the individual values the group to which he belongs, or the reference group to which he aspires, the more likely he is to adopt that group's norms, and the more resistant he is to suggestions which run counter to them. Mussen's study of attitudes towards Negroes at an interracial camp showed that those white boys who decreased in prejudice were generally the ones who were well satisfied with camp and their fellow campers.[20] Festinger, Schacter, and Back's study of small social groups in a housing project provides additional evidence of the greater influence of highly valued groups upon attitudes. In those housing units where "group cohesiveness" or attractiveness was high, they found a greater uniformity of opinion on controversial issues among the occupants.[21]

The opposite side of the same coin--that is, resistance to change where group norms are opposed to such change--has also been demonstrated. Kelley and Volkart studied the effect of lectures running counter to accepted Boy Scout attitudes towards woodcraft skills, upon members of several troops. They found that such lectures had a negative, or boomerang, effect among those Scouts who valued their membership in the troop highly.[22]

From experiments dealing with social effects upon perception, there is additional evidence of group influence upon the individual. One of the earliest of these is Sherif's study of the auto-kinetic effect. He found a difference between the way in which his subjects perceived the apparent movement of a stationary point of light against a background of total darkness when alone, and when judgment of the same effect was made in company with others.[23] Asch, too, experimented with group pressures to induce his subjects to change their judgment of the length of lines. Although he appeared to be successful, in subsequent interviews some of his subjects reported that they had not really changed their judgment, only that they said what they had, to avoid group censure.[24] Bruner and Postman studied children's estimation of the size of coins and found that it varied with their economic status. Poor children judged the coins to be larger than did rich children.[25] They might have used the results to write a nice little moral fable. But, being social scientists, they cited it merely as supportive testimony for social influence on perception. It's one of the sacrifices we all make in the name of science.

Then there is the testimony from the workshops themselves. Dr. Taba's evaluation of University of Chicago workshops[26] and Leland Bradford's report of six years of progress at Bethel[27] present evidence from follow-up studies with workshop participants of marked changes in attitudes achieved during workshop sessions. Equally impressive is Riecken's report of significant changes in degree of ethnocentrism and authoritarianism among participants in the Friends' Volunteer Work Camps.[28]

Besides these, there are innumerable studies of more specific influence of factors in the group situation. The effect of participation of group members in decision-making and problem-solving has already been indicated. A related problem is the effect of leadership style and leader participation upon the problem-solving behavior of groups. Lewin, Lippitt, and White's distinction between democratic, laissez-faire, and autocratic leaders has already become classic.[29] Their findings--that autocratic leaders evoked hostile behavior on the part of group members; that laissez-faire leaders increased friendliness among group members and task dissatisfaction, and that democratic leaders promoted satisfaction with achievement and high integration of groups--have since been confirmed by other researchers. Bovard's finding that members of what he terms "group-centered" groups were more susceptible to opinion change than members of "leader-centered groups"[30] also offers support for some of the assumptions listed previously.

The pressures which a group develops to induce conformity in its members have, understandably enough, intrigued a number of investigators. The small group communications experiments of Festinger and his associates have provided tangible evidence of the process of influence at work. Extreme deviants from established group norms received many more communications from their fellow participants than did more "normal" group members. Supporting evidence for the effects of group pressure appears in an experiment recounted by Hovland.[31] Here, Catholic students who had been put on notice, so to speak, that others in their group were of the same faith, proved more resistant to counter-norm communications than Catholics who believed themselves to be in a mixed-faith group.

Other investigators have studied the influence of group climate, of the effect of prior friendships among group members, of cultural differences, of group homogeneity and heterogeneity, and other factors. In general, these studies offer additional proof that mutually shared values, shared activities, greater group cohesiveness, and greater valuation placed upon group belongingness by individual members, make for greater pressures towards conformity to group norms and standards, and by the same token increase the group's influence for change.

We turn now to the fourth and fifth assumptions, which postulate the retention of attitudes and skills and their use in the trainees' home environments. Here, the evidence is more fragmentary and sometimes contradictory, making it difficult to draw evaluative conclusions. Both the Chicago and the Bethel group cite letters received and follow-up questionnaires returned by participants, reporting increased activity and effectiveness of graduates upon their return home. Riecken too gives evidence of the persistence of changes in attitudes and of an increase in human relations activity of former work camp participants. Similar testimony can certainly be furnished by workshop directors in any of the twenty or more states where these institutions operate.

But there is also disheartening evidence of indifference, of relapse into former patterns, even of occasional "boomerang" effects when the returning idealist finds himself at too great odds with his home-town group or his factory associates. It is such evidence that has led human relations workshops to ask that schools, communities, and industrial plants send "teams" rather than individuals. It has also led them to attempt various kinds of advance "fortification" of the returnee to prepare him for expected disappointments.

How shall we summarize these findings? Morris Raphael Cohen repeatedly cautioned us against the post hoc fallacy in social science experimentation. Neither temporal succession nor mere correlations establish causal relationships.

"A correlation," he wrote, "is an empirical or historical statement that in a certain proportion of instances two elements have occurred simultaneously or successively. A causal relation asserts more than mere past coincidence. It affirms that there is some reason or ground why, whenever the antecedent occurs, the consequence must follow."[32]

Judged by such rigorous standards, a good many of the experiments I have reported, and many I could not mention for want of time, leave much to be desired. Nevertheless, the accumulated evidence, even if not entirely conclusive, is quite impressive. Group processes do change some people who seem otherwise resistant to change. Democratic leadership and a permissive group climate are more effective in some learning situations, again with some people, than other forms of leadership. This is particularly true of the area of learning with which human relations training is concerned. For some persons, participation in group activity, particularly if the group is one to which a close personal allegiance is felt, seems to promote, even accelerate, change in the direction of better self- and group-regarding attitudes. There seems to be a factor in group living which is almost therapeutic in its ability to increase their sensitivity and susceptibility to change.

A portion of Dorwin Cartwright's summary of the ways in which the group process may be most effectively used as a medium of change[33] is worth repeating here:

1. If the group is to be used effectively as a medium of change, those people who are to be changed and those who are to exert influence for change must have a strong sense of belonging to the same group.

2. The more attractive the group is to its members, the greater is the influence that the group can exert on its members.

3. In attempts to change attitudes, values, or behavior, the more relevant they are to the basis of attraction to the group, the greater will be the influence that the group can exert upon them.

4. The greater the prestige of a group member in the eyes of the other members, the greater the influence he can exert.

5. Efforts to change individuals or subparts of a group which, if successful, would have the result of making them deviate from the norms of the group will encounter strong resistance.

6. Strong pressure for changes in the group can be established by creating a shared perception by members of the group for change, thus making the source of pressure for change lie within the group.

7. Information relating to the need for change, plans for change, and consequences of change must be shared by all relevant people in the group.

The fact that these salutary changes do not take place in all individuals under what may appear to be similar conditions should be regarded as a challenge to researchers and practitioners. On the one hand, we should be cautioned against unsupported generalization and exaggerated claims of effectiveness. Take, for example, a recently reported study of discussion groups at Bethel. The authors, Gage and Exline, started with a hypothesis which seemed to be the logical consequence of current assumptions in the field. It was that accuracy of social perception, or the degree to which "an individual's perception of the characteristics of other individuals or groups are in accord with reality," is related to the individual's effectiveness in discussion groups. This apparently self-evident statement, they were unable to substantiate. Instead, they found a number of complex situational variables which made clear prediction impossible.[34] On the other, it calls for increased and more rigorously controlled experimentation in this field. Obviously, we need to know much more than we do now about the ways in which influence is transmitted in groups, more about the optimum conditions for its transmission, more about the kinds of individuals who are or are not influenced to change. These things we can learn, as much by observation as by experiment.

Beyond this, I think that the results already obtained warrant the continuation and the extension of existing uses of the group process in human relations work.

Contact and Change

The third and final method we are to examine this morning is "contact." In this area, as in the others with which we have dealt, there are many theoretical problems which still await solution. Not the least of these is the definition of "contact" itself. Much of the difficulty in assessing the relative weight to be assigned to various studies purporting to prove the effectiveness or ineffectiveness of "contact" lies in this realm of definition. Posing quite a different theoretical problem is the fact that most investigators of intergroup contact have been concerned largely with its effect upon one variable--prejudice or tension. Consequently, avoidance of contact has almost always been construed simply as an act of hostility on the part of the majority group. Very little is known, however, about similar avoidance of contact by minority-group members. Here we are confronted by a totally different set of problems, involving maintenance of individual and group identity. To what extent, for example, does positive contact presuppose acceptance by minority members of majority norms or roles assigned to them by majority stereotypes? Can contact in limited spheres of action provide sufficient basis for increased intergroup understanding? While these and other such questions are outside the scope of our present discussion, it seems to me that our concern with the general problem of effectiveness must include at least an awareness of those other elements in the intergroup relations picture which need further study.

Contact among groups (personally I prefer the word interaction) is a necessary consequence of the progressive elimination of segregation and discrimination in employment, in education, in housing, in health, and other areas of social living. Regarded in this light, our problem is not to determine whether contact reduces intergroup hostility, but rather how, under what conditions, and in what manner it does so, and where it sometimes seems to fail, to discover and eliminate the conditions which led to failure.

It is, of course, obvious that intergroup hostilities as well as intergroup harmony must occur at "points of contact" between hostile groups. In general, it is probably true that where the special interests of groups are, or appear to group members to be, in basic conflict, contact alone not only fails to achieve harmony but sometimes has the opposite effect. Ram and Murphy's recently-reported investigation of bitterly hostile Moslem and Hindu groups[35] is one of a number of studies which indicate that such contact does little to improve intergroup attitudes. Or, take the case described in Sherif's camping study. Here, after a series of artificially-created hostile incidents, and the "successful" establishment of a tension situation between two groups of boys, further contact between members of the opposing groups only led to overt expression of enmity.

But, while these caveats are necessary, if only to warn against over-optimistic generalizations, there is a mounting body of evidence that under certain conditions contact or interaction can and does lead to better understanding, and is positively related to reduction in prejudice.

Some five years ago, while studying patterns of prejudice in a large Eastern city, we found that there was a measurable relationship between the majority group's prejudice and the extent of its contact with minority groups. Those who reported such contact, especially those who remembered childhood friendships with minority-group members, expressed less prejudice than those who did not. This same relatinnship was confirmed the following year in another city, this time in the Midwest. In a more recent study, still in progress, we seem to be finding the same influence at work within the minority group itself. Teen-agers who neither date members of the majority group nor report frequent close friendship contacts, appear in general to be less favorably disposed to them than those who do go out on mixed dates or report other friendship contacts.

That such facts offer no proof of a causal relationship is, of course, obvious. Our data do not allow us to determine conclusively which of these variables is cause, which effect, or whether both may be due to a third factor not yet isolated. This situation only points up the ever-present difficulty in social science research of isolating significant variables, not to speak of determining actual cause-and-effect relationships. How, for example, should we understand the Deutsch and Collins finding that white tenants of integrated public housing units show more favorable attitudes towards their Negro neighbors than do the tenants of segregated units[36]? As evidence of the effect of "equal-status" contact? As evidence of the importance of simple propinquity? Or as evidence of the fact that integration provides increased opportunity for shared activities?

There is, however, one conclusion I think we can draw from these studies, and it is an important one: that is, contact between groups, per se, neither causes nor promotes intergroup hostility or tension. For if it did, the relationship we found could not have occurred.

That all forms of interaction, under any and all conditions, reduce hostility, no one will assert. Mussen's study of children at an interracial camp, for example, provides evidence that contact alone neither decreases nor increases prejudice towards Negroes. Whether a child reacted positively or negatively to the contact experience seemed to be related to his "susceptibility to change," a personality factor, as well as to whether or not he felt the camp experience to be a rewarding one.[37]

Here, the conditions which favored a positive effect were personality variables and satisfaction with the camp experience. No one will today deny the importance of personality as a factor in prejudice. However, since the overwhelming majority of contact situations outside of training centers do not permit social scientists or practitioners to manipulate "personality" variables, we must, as practitioners, examine other factors which have been found to be associated with "favorable" contact situations. Two such elements are emphasized in recent research evidence. The first is "equal-status" contact; the second, contact accompanied by common activity towards a shared objective.

As to the first of these, "equal-status," it is by no means so easily isolated as might appear. Status is a complex phenomenon in our society, and some of the experimental evidence cited in support of "equal-status" contact is hardly conclusive. As is so often the case with experimental evidence, what is actually demonstrated is the obverse conclusion: that contact among individuals of unequal status, from different groups, sometimes--but not always--results in greater hostility, and often fails to reduce prejudice.

Let me give an example of the complexity of the variables which actually enter a supposedly simple intergroup contact situation. From a pilot study of a small-town Girl Scout troop, undertaken by our department, which unfortunately was never completed, we gained an interesting insight into one of the conditions of acceptance of a minority-group member by her majority-group associates. Neither equal status nor shared activity seemed to be crucial, although both were present--but rather, the cheerful enactment by the Negro Girl Scout, of the role which the "normal" majority stereotype assigned to her: tidying up after the meeting and other similar duties. Such conditional acceptance could hardly be regarded as evidence of the influence of either equal status or shared activity. On the contrary, we would be right to regard such "acceptance" with extreme suspicion as scientists and distaste as human relations workers.

Or take the evidence presented in The American Soldier of the more favorable attitudes toward Negro soldiers shown by white soldiers who had fought alongside Negro troops.[38] Here the common objective is, of course, obvious. But just what is the meaning of "equal status" in a citizen army? The army is, to be sure, a great leveler; but what about the many "back home" status differences--should we assume that the common objective had made those disappear?

My guess is that the formulation of the conditions favorable to contact is somewhat more complex. It should take the form of a statement specifying the product of contact as a resultant of two or more forces. We might assay some hypothesis such as this: "When two groups of people interact in a situation involving a mutually desirable objective, such interaction will result in reduction of prejudice and intergroup tension, if the force of the drive toward attainment of their common goal is greater than the force or forces tending to perpetuate hostility. These latter could be unequal status, competitive goals, incompatible norms or value systems. The extent of reduction in tension or hostility will vary with the relative strength of the opposing forces."

It is easy to see how the example just given of combat troops could be made to fit the framework of this hypothesis. The sequel to the Sherif camping study may also be seen as conforming to this scheme. There, after initial hostilities between groups had been set in motion, an attempt was made to reduce tensions by having both groups participate as teammates in a game pitting the entire camp against another "out-group."

It was only partially successful, however, since some boys had apparently developed such hostility that the relatively short "peace" period was not long enough to make them change.

It seems to me that reformulation of the problem along these lines would have several advantages. For the researcher, this approach would ensure his taking experimental notice of the many variables which influence his results. It suggests the framework for objective measurement of these variables and also permits easier formulation of sub-hypotheses in quantitative terms suitable to experimental procedures. Moreover, in any practical situation it compels us to take notice of all the forces at work in a given interaction situation. Such awareness should enable us to foresee and provide against anticipated difficulties.

Conclusion

It would probably leave all of us with a comfortable feeling of having achieved a desired goal, if I could now summarize all of the previous findings in a few well-chosen sentences. Or, better still, transform them into a few maxims or guides to action. Regrettably, it can't be done--not just yet. Perhaps if we ever do reach the point at which we, like Anatole France's wise men, can sum up human experience in half a dozen words, it will be just as unnecessary for us to do so.

For the moment, however, all of us, practitioners and researchers, are still some distance from complacency, but I think it must also be said that in the really incredibly short space of time during which we have begun to apply science to human relations problems, we have come a long way. There is a growing body of research which has significant things to say about many of the assumptions made in our work, and upon which both social scientist and practitioner can draw. There is greatly heightened awareness of the vital need for scientific appraisal and testing of effectiveness of methods whether new or old. And what is even more important, there is increased appreciation of the complexity of the phenomena with which we deal, both among researchers and practitioners. With this has come a growing reluctance to generalize on the basis of limited observation. It is this demonstration of complexity as well as the need for a continuing process of self-examination and questioning of old assumptions which, to my mind, constitute the really significant contributions which research has so far made. To realize that we have to do with complex problems is no small achievement. Without it we could not have hoped to progress much beyond the old trial and error methods. The steps before us now are the identification and isolation of the many variables which determine the course of interaction between individuals and groups, and the perfection of even more effective techniques for utilizing those elements in the social and personal situation which facilitate change, and coping with those which stand in our way.

ASSESSING THE TECHNIQUES FOR ACTION: COMMUNITY ORGANIZATION, LEGISLATION AND LITIGATION, CHANGING ADMINISTRATIVE POLICY

Arnold Aronson

Legislation, judicial enforcement and precedent, executive and administrative action, political organization and pressure--these are the techniques through which citizens in our democracy have always sought to redress their grievances and protect their rights. All of these techniques have been used by intergroup relations agencies in the effort to assure equal rights, equal opportunities, and equal justice for all Americans irrespective of race, creed, color, national origin, or ancestry.

Obviously, it would simplify life for the intergroup relations practitioner, to say nothing of advancing our common cause, if the effects of these techniques had been so tested that we could determine for what purposes, under what circumstances, and with what effects, each could be used most advantageously. In the absence of any such proven guide, and of any willingness to suspend activity pending its development, intergroup relations agencies have had to proceed on a trial and error basis in accordance with their best reasoning and judgment.

The key question in attempting to assess the effectiveness of these techniques is the criteria to be used. For the selection of criteria must precede the development of any sound program of evaluative research.

Programs and methods should be judged, at least initially, in relation to the objectives they seek to attain. If the techniques which were discussed at this morning's session--the mass media of communication, intercultural education, intergroup contact, and the like--may be said to be aimed primarily at changing attitudes and minimizing prejudices, the major objective in the use of the techniques we are now considering would seem to be to change conduct and minimize discrimination.

Although prejudice, discrimination, and intergroup conflict are neither synonymous nor necessarily coextensive, they are closely interrelated. The consequences of programs and activities which ostensibly are directed at only one or another of these phenomena, are no less interrelated and interdependent. It is, therefore, not sufficient to test techniques and methods solely in relation to their immediate and professed goals.

Any attempt to attribute prejudice or discrimination to any single factor would be regarded as the grossest oversimplification. Instead, the principle of "multiple causation" has come to be accepted as axiomatic. It seems to me equally important in developing criteria for evaluating techniques that the principle of "multiple motivation" be taken into account.

Intergroup relations agencies typically are seeking a variety of goals at the same time. It does not take more than superficial analysis to indicate that agencies which have joined together for the announced purpose of enacting a fair educational law regard the achievement of this goal as but a means to other often inarticulated and possibly opposing objectives. In this perspective, each short-run goal is a step towards a long-range basic objective, involving ultimately the agency's conception of the ideal society. The further one moves away from the immediate agreed-upon objective which has brought a group of agencies together, the more their views, values, and goals will be found to diverge. Thus, as one moves from an assessment of techniques in relation to their direct and immediate effects to an examination of their indirect and more far-reaching consequences, the more difficult it becomes to formulate compatible and mutually acceptable criteria.

I shall not presume to assess the effectiveness of the techniques of law and law enforcement but simply try to indicate some of the reasons why the practitioner finds it difficult to make such an assessment, in the hope that this may help in the formulation of appropriate criteria and research approaches.

Intergroup relations agencies have sought to invoke the powers of government to protect and to extend the guarantees of human rights. Presumably, therefore, the number of laws, regulations, and court decisions providing such guarantees represent one measure of the effectiveness of these efforts.

On the basis of this criterion, an impressive record of accomplishment can be compiled. Since 1945, when the first state fair employment practice law was adopted in New York, 11 FEPC laws, 2 fair educational practice acts, 5 acts improving the administration of public accommodation laws (one of which applies to schools and is thus, in effect, a third fair educational practice act), 19 laws forbidding discrimination in various types of housing, 5 laws forbidding segregation in state units of the National Guard, 5 laws forbidding or reducing segregation in public schools, 2 anti-lynching laws, 4 anti-mask laws directed at the KKK, and 40 other miscellaneous anti-discrimination and anti-bias laws have been enacted.

During that same period, successive Presidents have used the powers of that office against discriminatory practices and have issued executive orders prohibiting discrimination within the federal establishment, in the armed services, and in employment under government contract.

During that period, too, the Supreme Court has outlawed the white primary (Smith v. Allwright), held that restrictive covenants cannot be judicially enforced (Shelley v. Kraemer), and barred segregation in interstate travel (Henderson v. U. S.), and in the graduate and professional schools of state universities (Sweatt v. Painter and McLaurin v. Oklahoma State Regents).

Thirty cities have enacted municipal FEP ordinances, more than 70 have established statutory intergroup relations commissions, several have adopted ordinances forbidding discrimination in public housing and urban redevelopment programs.

This is but a very partial record and one which could be multiplied many times over with examples of favorable action on every level of government.

If legislative enactments and favorable court rulings are an index of "successful" efforts, are then legislative defeats and adverse decisions "failures," to be placed on the debit side of the ledger? If so, at what point in time is judgment to be passed?

More than two years of organized and seemingly unproductive effort preceded the issuance of President Truman's order establishing the Committee on Government Contract Compliance; virtually every state FEP law now on the books was preceded by one or more unsuccessful campaigns; successive "defeats" in the lower courts have often been over-ruled. Who is to say that Illinois will not yet have an FEP law? And when that comes to pass, will it constitute an effective use of the legislative technique in contrast to the five previous ineffective campaigns, or will it represent the culmination and cumulative effect of ten years of effort?

Not one of the hundreds of civil rights bills that have been before the Congress continuously for the past decade has been enacted, despite the expenditure of considerable time, money, and effort by intergroup relations agencies. During all this period no federal civil rights bill has been so much as brought to a vote in the U. S. Senate.

And yet who is to gainsay the possibility that it was the organized efforts for a federal FEPC, which provided the motive force behind the "successful" FEP campaigns on the state and local levels? Was the "unsuccessful" pressure for a federal anti-poll-tax bill of no consequence in the decisions of Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, South Carolina, and Tennessee to eliminate the poll-tax in their states? Was the 30 years' agitation for a federal anti-lynching bill of no influence in the enactment of the Texas and South Carolina anti-lynching laws? of the various anti-mask ordinances? of the increased frequency of state prosecutions? the improvement in police protection? the sharp decline in lynching itself? Was there no relationship between the voluntary FEP plan proposed by the Illinois Chamber of Commerce and the concerted pressure for a state law? Would South Carolina or Mississippi have voted so many millions to equalize Negro and white schools were it not for the pressure to end the segregated school system? These are but a few illustrations of the futility of attempting to assess these techniques by mechanical and static criteria.

Let us turn again to the list of "successful" efforts--to the laws which have been enacted and the orders which have been issued. I said earlier that a primary purpose in seeking such laws and regulations was to minimize discrimination. Presumably, therefore, one measure of their effectiveness is the extent to which they can in fact be shown to have reduced discriminatory practices.

Considerable positive evidence on this level can be compiled on the basis of objective records. Just by way of illustration, segregated units in the armed forces have been almost completely eliminated; many formerly segregated housing units have been integrated; upwards of 1,000 Negro students are attending Southern universities from which they previously were excluded. In each of these cases, a policy of discrimination was openly admitted and defended until the pertinent order, ordinance, or court decision. It therefore seems reasonable to attribute the change in policy and practice to governmental intervention.

Where, however, as is generally the case, discrimination has always been denied, it is far more difficult to obtain evidence of changed practices or to establish a causal relationship between such a change and the legal prohibition.

We know, for example, that opportunities for Negro employment have increased markedly during the past decade. What criteria can be used, however, to isolate the effect of FEP laws from such other variables as general business and labor market conditions, the availability of trained and qualified Negro applicants, the changing political and social climate, etc.? Can this increased employment justifiably be taken as evidence of reduced discrimination? Is the absence of minority-group employment evidence of discrimination?

We know that the enactment of laws prohibiting discrimination in employment, education, or places of public accommodation has been followed by a decline in discriminatory advertisements, discriminatory application and registration forms, discriminatory provisions in union constitutions, discriminatory job orders, and the like. These, however, are but the outward manifestations of discrimination.

A decline in these manifestations may mean an actual reduction in discrimination. Or, it may imply simply that the offending employer, university, or hotel has found more subtle and devious means for continued and undiminished discrimination. How valid then are these as criteria of effectiveness?

Let us consider the actual handling of cases. Since the enactment of the Ives-Quinn Act in 1945, the various state and municipal fair employment practices commissions have handled approximately 6,000 cases and have achieved a satisfactory adjustment in virtually all cases in which evidence of discrimination was found. This criterion, however, completely fails to take into account the number of employers who voluntarily may have changed their practices to conform to the provisions of the law. It also fails to take into account the possibly even larger number who may be violating the law even though no complaints have been filed against them.

The use of case statistics as an index of effectiveness raises a number of other questions. What, for example, are the criteria for "satisfactory adjustment"? One case may lead to a fundamental change in the practices of a large firm and thereby open up opportunities for thousands of workers; another may result only in the deletion of an offending question from an application form.

What relative weight is to be given in each of these cases? How are they to be differentiated at all in a statistical table headed "Satisfactory Adjustments"?

The enforcing agencies take pride in the fact that they have so seldom found it necessary to go beyond the stage of informal conciliation in the settlement of cases. Is this seemingly impressive record an indication of great effectiveness or, since the terms of the conciliation agreements are not made public, of cheap and easy settlements?

Information on the extent of Negro employment generally and at various occupational levels is readily available through official governmental and private research organizations. No such information is available with respect to the employment of religious minorities. The presence or absence of Negro employees in a plant is easily observable. No such visible check of, let us say, Jewish workers is possible. Discrimination against Negroes until recently has had a measure of community acceptance, with the result that employers have frequently been willing to admit to a discriminatory policy and to face frankly the question of a change in such a policy. Almost without exception, however, employers are unwilling to admit to a discriminatory policy against Jews and can point to some Jewish employment in their firms as evidence of a fair policy. Whereas discrimination against Negroes frequently takes the form of total exclusion or of employment on menial jobs only, there is no one general pattern of discrimination against Jews, but a multiplicity of patterns which permit little in the way of generalization. Discrimination against Jews varies industry by industry, firm by firm within each industry, department by department within each firm. Jews are found at every level of occupation and are similarly discriminated against at every occupational level. One industry will accept Jews only in sales positions while another will permit Jews in their employment at every level except sales.

Assuming that FEP laws can be demonstrated to have reduced discrimination against Negroes, does it necessarily follow that it has reduced discrimination against all minorities? Are the motivations for discrimination against different groups the same? May not a technique which is effective in reducing discrimination against one group have a totally different effect when applied to others?

To seek a law, to press for executive action, to file a suit, these are all public actions which by their very nature focus attention on the issues involved. Such actions, even though aimed at influencing modes of conduct, inevitably will affect opinions and attitudes as well.

During the debate which preceded the passage of the Ives-Quinn Act, six distinguished citizens, including Oswald Garrison Villard, all of whom strongly opposed racial and religious discrimination, wrote to the New York Times opposing the bill as "a remedy . . . worse than the disease." The fears they expressed--the fear that government intervention in the field of human rights would intensify prejudice and hostility and possibly lead to open conflict--has permeated every legislative campaign for civil rights and every significant court action. The prediction of some Southern governors that a favorable ruling in the pending school segregation cases will result in bloodshed and violence is but the latest in a long series of such dire prophecies.

Proponents of law and law enforcement have been no less insistent that the use of these techniques would reduce not only discrimination but prejudice as well. The enactment of a law, or the campaign attendant upon its passage, they contend, leads to a reappraisal of past thinking and a replacement of attitudes based on unthinking conformance to outmoded patterns.

What kind of an assessment can be made on the basis of our experience to date? And, once again, what are the criteria for making such an assessment?

As with discrimination, some evidence can be compiled on the basis of simple observation. We know that, except for a few isolated cases, the prophecies of open conflict and violence, happily, have proved false. We know that businesses have not, as was predicted, fled areas of FEPC jurisdiction. We know that the forebodings of mass strikes and walkouts as a result of such laws have been unfounded. Evidences of such gross overt effects are readily observable.

What evidences are there, however, by which to judge the extent to which, and the direction in which, prejudices have been influenced? If a successful FEP campaign leads to an acceptance of the principle of equal job opportunity and a diminution of prejudice, does the rejection of such a measure by a legislature give sanction to and intensify prejudicial feelings? How can we determine the extent to which attitudes are shaped by a law as distinct from all the myriad of other opinion-molding influences? Would the verbalization of a respondent represent any reliable measure?

Suppose that prejudice can be shown to have been increased immediately after passage of an FEP law. May it not be reversed as the administration of the law proceeds without untoward incident? At what point is the assessment to be made?

The agencies administering anti-discrimination laws have all emphasized the "educational" rather than the "punitive" aspects of the legislation. What have been the results of these efforts? Do these government-endorsed and government-sponsored "educational" programs have greater or lesser receptivity than similar programs under the auspices of self-interested minority groups?

The task of formulating criteria for evaluation on this level is further complicated because of the value premises involved. Assume that a legislative enactment can be shown to have intensified prejudicial attitudes and opinions at the same time that it has reduced overt discriminatory acts. Clearly, the victim of discrimination who would willingly work with a bigot, study with a bigot, and live with a bigot, so long as an opportunity for employment, education, and housing were made available to him, would place a totally different evaluation on the law from one whose primary concern is to minimize divisive and hostile feelings.

Assume, again, that a court decision outlawing segregation in the public school system does result in violence? Certainly numerous instances in our history can be cited where intensified conflict has resulted in changes which would generally be accepted as improvements. In each case evaluation would depend upon one's scale of values.

Moreover, the failure to act is in itself a form of action with its own set of consequences. The court action in the school cases may lead to increased hostility and conflict; not to have initiated those cases might well have avoided conflict while reinforcing and perpetuating the pattern of discrimination. The enactment of an FEP law may be shown to have increased prejudice and hostility; the failure of a democratic government to prevent the denial of employment opportunities to large groups of its citizens through such a law could easily have far more serious repercussions.

Thus, in the short run at least, the reduction of discrimination, prejudice, and intergroup conflict are not necessarily compatible, and the relative weight to be given an increase in one as against a decrease in another involves a basic value judgment. Research on this level, therefore, must be on a continuous rather than static basis and must be so designed as to measure trends and long-range consequences as well as brief and temporary effects.

If the power of government can be used to safeguard human rights and to advance intergroup relations, it can also be used to promote intergroup tension and strife. The use of racism by Hitler and Malan as a means of achieving and solidifying political power is sufficiently familiar to require no further elaboration. Present efforts to secure civil rights legislation in our country are largely designed to overcome earlier setbacks. And, even today, legislation to compel racial segregation occupies more space on the nation's statute books than the relatively small number of laws which the civil rights forces have succeeded in enacting.

It is clear, therefore, that the techniques of law and law enforcement cannot be assessed in the one-dimensional terms in which we have been discussing them so far. We cannot assess the consequences of "legislative campaigns" without regard to the infinite variety of forms which such campaigns may take nor without regard to the equally varied circumstances and conditions under which they are undertaken.

It is not enough for the practitioner to know that "all other conditions being equal," a certain technique will affect prejudice in a given direction. "All other conditions being equal" is a consummation devoutly to be wished but never to be found. To determine policy and program, the practitioner must weigh and consider alternative possibilities and attempt to assess the differential effectiveness of various techniques and approaches in the light of the total situation. The same technique will have a successful outcome in one situation and not in others. What are the factors which determine the different outcomes in each case? What valid generalizations can be drawn from cases occurring under such varied conditions?

The struggle for civil rights has global as well as national and local political implications. The practitioner must relate his strategy, his tactics, and his timing to the changing economic and social condition and the constantly shifting alignment of political forces.

Research can never replace the need for reasoned and seasoned judgment. To the extent that it is able to throw light on some of the questions I have posed, however, it will help the practitioner to decide and to act wisely, and will thereby make a significant contribution to better intergroup relations.

TYPES OF AGENCIES. The 280 agencies and their 268 field offices are divided into ten categories according to their geographic scope of operation and their authorization (public or private): federal, national private, territorial public, regional public and private, state public, state private, local public, local private, university centers, and Canadian private.

GEOGRAPHIC SCOPE. Division into national, regional, state and local categories has been determined almost entirely by the agencies' own definition and terminology. This is especially true of agencies' field offices and affiliates, information about which was obtained from the parent body.

CROSS REFERENCE. Included in the description of each federal and national agency is a list of its field offices and affiliates, with page references indicating where these offices have been entered. These references are simply page numbers in parentheses. Thus, under the national listing for the Anti-Defamation League, Michigan, Detroit (28) refers to that regional office's listing on page 28.

DUPLICATE LISTINGS. Regional offices with a scope of operation that seems limited to one state are marked by an asterisk (*) and appear again under the appropriate state heading. Thus, the *Michigan Regional Office of the Anti-Defamation League has a second listing on page 40, under State Private agencies.

SEQUENCE OF LISTINGS. National and federal agencies are listed alphabetically; regional offices alphabetically under regions; state public and state private agencies alphabetically, by states; local public and local private agencies alphabetically, by states and by cities; university centers and Canadian private agencies alphabetically.

REGIONAL BREAKDOWN (BY STATES). In determining regional groupings, the states have been divided arbitrarily into six major regions:

NORTHEAST — Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont.

SOUTHEAST — Alabama, Delaware, District of Columbia, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, West Virginia.

MIDWEST — Colorado, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, North Dakota, Ohio, South Dakota, Wisconsin.

SOUTH CENTRAL — Arkansas, Louisiana, Missouri, Oklahoma.

NORTHWEST — Alaska, Idaho, Montana, Oregon, Washington, Wyoming.

SOUTHWEST — Arizona, California, Hawaii, Nevada, New Mexico, Utah, Texas.

AGENCY INFORMATION. For each field office or affiliate of a larger agency, the Directory listing comprises the address and professional staff director only. Purpose and activities, publications, etc., may be found in the listing for the parent organization.

INTRODUCTION

The National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials (NAIRO) offers in this volume the first comprehensive directory of intergroup relations agencies published in eleven years. Since the publication in 1948 of the earlier listing, compiled by the American Council on Race Relations, there has been a constant demand for an up-to-date edition. This Directory of Intergroup Relations Agencies With Paid Professional Personnel has been prepared in response to that need and is presented to the field as a prime tool for developing the interagency and intraprofessional communication so essential to the advancement of more effective intergroup relations practice.

NAIRO'S decision to include in the present directory only those agencies with paid professional staff was reached after considerable experience with the 1948 listing; whether lack of paid personnel represents cause or effect, the fact remains that unstaffed agencies have had a higher mortality rate than those listed in this publication. And while many unstaffed agencies have existed for a number of years, communication with them has been, at best, difficult because of the lack of a permanent office address and changing volunteer leadership. It scarcely need be said that their exclusion from this listing in no way deprecates their significant and continuing contribution to the common cause.

In determining whether or not an organization warranted listing as an intergroup relations agency (or intergroup relations department within an organization of broader scope and purpose), the editors utilized a broad definition, leniently applied. Each agency was then given an opportunity to veto its inclusion, and some did. Those finally included can, in any event, be said to share an active concern with prejudice and discrimination against racial, religious and cultural minorities. Stated more positively, all are working through varying programs to secure equal opportunity and maximum dignity for all individuals.

Every effort has been made to insure that each listing would be correct and up-to-date. The necessary information was gathered from the individual agencies themselves and was re-checked in many instances; the final copy was then submitted to each agency for last-minute approval. Yet, even as the Directory rolls through the presses, personnel will change and offices will be relocated. It can only be said then that, as long as demand warrants, NAIRO will undertake an annual or at least biennial revision of this publication. Corrections and additions will be accepted gratefully in the meantime.

The field of intergroup relations has grown markedly since the publication of the earlier directory eleven years ago. Nothing could describe this more graphically than the article* from the Journal of Intergroup Relations published as an appendix to this volume. As the field has grown, so has the profession of intergroup relations. NAIRO, an infant in 1948, is today a thriving professional association that provides the major channel of interagency communication among some 1,400 practitioners and countless lay leaders. This directory is but one facet of a nationwide program to help these individuals develop techniques, methods and concepts that will permit them to function more effectively in an area of human relations that has never been more important.

Publication of the Directory would not have been possible without an outstanding contribution of time and talent by three individuals: Dr. Helen E. Amerman, Oakland (Calif.) Redevelopment Agency, who compiled the exhaustive list of agencies, and Mrs. Frances Cousens and Mrs. Margaret Willette, both of the Michigan Fair Employment Practices Commission, who organized and first edited the data subsequently collected. Since a project of this nature needs considerable organizational encouragement, tribute is also due the four presidents of NAIRO under whose administrations the work progressed — Marshall Bragdon, Mayor's Friendly Relations Committee, Cincinnati; John G. Feild, Office of U.S. Senator Philip Hart; Arnold Aronson, National Community Relations Advisory Council; and Margaret Garrity, President's Committee on Government Contracts.

SOME OBSERVATIONS ON THE NATURE AND SCOPE OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS*

— FRANCES R. COUSENS AND
JOHN G. FEILD

In Search of a History

No field of human endeavor ever arrives on the scene full blown and well defined. The emergence of social organizations concerned with those problems arising out of relations between racial, religious and ethnic groups in the United States is no exception. Unfortunately, the value of a comprehensive history of intergroup relations agencies has not yet grasped the imagination of our scholars. This is not easy to understand for it may not be too much to say that the history of the United States is the history of the intergroup relations field. With their astute awareness of the political implications of interreligious relationships, the Continental Congress, from a very broad perspective, could be called our first intergroup relations agency. Or one might point to the Federalists as another of our earliest organizations with an interest in intergroup relations. Certainly, the theory, the concepts embodied in the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution and the first ten amendments have profoundly influenced every intergroup agency, public or private, established since their promulgation. At any rate, until a comprehensive history is available, a few sketchy observations on the origins of the field may be helpful in our review of present trends as revealed in the new NAIRO Directory of Intergroup Relations Agencies with Paid Professional Personnel.

Early Origins

It seems fitting that this country's first philanthropic foundation — the Peabody Fund — should have played so vital a role in fusing the two impulses that have produced the intergroup relations field as we know it today. Following the Civil War, when it became clear that the re-structuring of racial relationships could not be consolidated or preserved without massive improvement in the economic and social welfare of the newly freed Negroes, the Peabody Fund launched a program of grants in the field of education as a private agency counterpart to the publicly sponsored Freedmen's Bureau created four years before in 1864. Thus, political freedom and private philanthropy were merged to form an organized field of professional activity that has vacillated from its earliest beginnings between a concern for individual rights and group welfare. Earlier, of course, the New England Abolitionist Societies, which sprang up in the 1850's, must also be credited among the first agencies centered on problems of race and civil rights. And, on the other flank, apart from the churches, the Indian Bureau, established in 1849, was among the earliest with a group welfare base.

From an over-all perspective, in the 50 formative years between 1865 and 1915, it is not surprising that there should be strong emphasis on the establishment of agencies geared to the problems of economic and social adjustment of particular racial, ethnic and religious groups. On the one hand, the successive waves of immigrants were bringing with them problems that differed mainly in their variant overtones of religious and ethnic differences; on the other hand, shortly after the turn of the century, the movement of Negroes from the Old South to Northern urban centers had created new dimensions, if not new problems, of Negro adjustment. The establishment of the National Urban League in 1910 was but an ideological extension of a pattern typified by the Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society, established in 1884. Whether looked upon as "Americanization" or "urbanization," the requirements of social and economic adjustments brought into being a great number of such agencies during this period, most of them encouraged by church sponsorship. Few among those that have continued have related their interests to the civil rights or community relations side of the field. Most, in fact, allied their interests with and helped create the social work profession.

Among those organizations established during this period that did relate the problems of group welfare to the fulfillment of individual and civil rights, four additional ones have continued and are listed in the NAIRO Directory — the Indian Rights Association (1882), the American Jewish Committee (1906), the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (1909), and the Anti-Defamation League (1913). Two other agencies established prior to 1915 are also listed: The American Ethical Society (1887), and the Jewish War Veterans (1896).

The Ambivalent Transition

By 1915, as we have said, the social work profession had emerged and the lines of professionalization in both group work and case work were fairly well laid out. Hull House, founded in 1891, under Jane Addams' leadership, had become the model of the new approach toward culture. Social science research, university based training and ultimately schools of social work became the allies of the group welfare agencies. At this juncture, we also saw the renewal of philanthropic support.[1] The Phelps-Stokes Fund, established in 1911, was joined by the Rosenwald Fund in 1917, both having heavy interests in Negro education and race relations. About the same time, studies sponsored by the Carnegie Corporation and the Russell Sage Foundation, created in 1907, contributed substantially to the elevation of social work standards.

The terrifying events of the post-World War I era, however, forged an increasing awareness of the relationship between group welfare and community acceptance of individual rights and group differences. The activities of the Ku Klux Klan forced into being new protective measures in the civil rights arena and brought about a renewed realization that public policy could and did determine much of the nature of intergroup relations. To enumerate the events affecting intergroup relations in the 25 transition years between 1915 and 1940 is to call a roster of new agencies. The 1917 Louisville racial zoning decision was the

1. The Peabody Fund, ironically, closed its books within a few months of the Plessy v. Ferguson decision. It had spent $2,478,527.13. The Freedman's Bureau had spent $20 million. But the tide of segregation was too great, the resources insufficient.

NAACP's first major success. The 1921-1924 Quota Laws saw the establishment of the Common Council for American Unity in 1921 and the International Institute movement in 1924. In addition, the American Jewish Congress, established first in 1917 as a temporary entity to affect the minority rights provisions of the Versailles Treaty, was re-established on a permanent basis in 1922. The Scopes, Sweatt and other civil liberties trials saw the American Civil Liberties Union created in 1920. The American Association of Indian Affairs came into being two years before Indians were granted their citizenship in 1924. Changes in immigration laws regarding Orientals were connected with the origin of the Japanese American Citizens League in 1930. The Al Smith campaign led to the establishment of the National Conference of Christians and Jews in 1928. Concern with denial of voting rights, led U. S. Attorney General Frank Murphy to establish the Civil Rights Section in the Office of the Attorney General in 1939. Finally, the Fellowship House movement, the Catholic Interracial Council plan and the structure of the growing Jewish Community Relations Councils were all fairly well established by the end of the 1930's.

The Fateful, Fruitful Forties

The emergence in the 1940's of local, state and federal governmental agencies, triggered by President Roosevelt's Executive Order #8802 in 1941, set the stage for the explosive growth of those agencies having a primary interest in civil rights and community relations. At the same time, the Carnegie Corporation once again sponsored a series of studies that was to have as profound an influence on the development of the intergroup relations field as had been true of their earlier studies in social work.[1] The Rosenwald Fund had established the American Council on Race Relations in 1944.[2] At about the same time there was growing concern with standards and the need for more effective program services among the Jewish community relations agencies leading to the establishment of the National Community Relations Advisory Council in 1944. The annual reassessment conferences sponsored by this agency have achieved an important significance throughout the field. In the South, the founding of the Southern Regional Council in 1944 had been preceded by the Commission on Interracial Cooperation which came into being in 1919. In addition, the 1940's saw the creation of special departments or assignments in intergroup relations in more than 50 church groups, unions, youth agencies, and various governmental agencies.

Following World War II, the field of public education became the target of a vigorous two-pronged effort. On the one front, the Bureau of Intercultural Education (now defunct) and several other national agencies initiated efforts aimed at re-orienting public instruction methods and goals in the field of human relations. The workshop as a training method gained its greatest vogue in these teacher-training programs. Today, nearly 130 colleges and universities are involved in annual, bi-annual or special workshop programs in intergroup relations and in the past twelve years nearly 100,000 persons, most of them school teachers, have been exposed to these efforts which are heavily supported by intergroup agencies. On the other front, the culmination of a long legal effort aimed at overturning the Plessy v. Ferguson doctrine took shape in the 1940's with Supreme Court decisions involving restrictive covenants, interstate travel and higher education. Outlawing school segregation in all public schools became inevitable following these actions.

Finally, the famous 1947 Report of President Truman's Committee on Civil Rights projected the issues of intergroup relations well beyond the limits of group welfare. The enactment by Congress in 1957 of the first Federal Civil Rights legislation in 82 years has returned the cycle of history to a sharp focus on the re-structuring of intergroup relationships.

Trends in the Nature and Scope Today

There are 280[1] staffed agencies or departments listed in the new NAIRO Dirctory — 79 governmental and 201 private. These agencies employ 1406 professional workers[2] and maintain 548 central, regional and local offices. In addition, the Directory lists eight University Centers directly serving the intergroup relations field. Geographically, the agency services embrace 136 cities in 42 states,[3] the District of Columbia, and Canada. Their combined annual budgets exceed 21 million dollars of which approximately four and a half million is from tax funds.[4]

Except for five agencies all were established after 1900. More significantly, only 37 of the listed agencies were established prior to 1940. All but two of the 79 governmental agencies have come into existence since 1943.[5] Of the Jewish Community Relations Councils, 65 of the 80 listed were established after 1940, as is true of all 25 of the special church sponsored departments, all of the special union departments, and all 17 special assignments in youth and other agencies. In addition, 27 of the 28 local and state private community relations agencies came into being after 1940.[6] Similarly, most of the national agencies with extensive field offices did not expand their field programs to any significant degree until after 1940. Most of the University Centers were not established until after 1950.

Of the agencies established before 1940, 14 are primarily group welfare agencies — settlement houses, aid societies, relocation agencies. An additional 26 agencies created since 1940 are centered around group welfare. Thus, only 40 agencies, or 15% of those listed, could be called group work agencies and most of these have apparently directed at least a part of their programs toward community relationships between racial, religious and ethnic groups. It might also be observed that almost 20% of the professional workers listed are identified

1. Figures cited are approximate but reasonably accurate. Minor additions and deletions have been made in the Directory since the article was written.
2. This is a very careful approximation. Detailed questionnaires were available for all but a small percentage of agencies.
3. States having no local offices are: Alaska, Hawaii, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, Vermont and Wyoming.
4. This is a reasonably close approximation. Questionnaires were available for most agencies. Budgets for the others were difficult to estimate.
5. The Indian Bureau and the Justice Department Civil Rights Section were established prior to 1940 as previously noted. The Indian Bureau does not consider itself an intergroup relations agency and, at its own request, is not included in the Directory; the Civil Rights Section, U. S. Department of Justice, has been superseded by the Civil Rights Division.
6. The Alabama Council on Human Relations was founded in 1920, as part of the program of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation.

with group work agencies. With their relatively small population base, however, it is not likely that the newer group welfare agencies will expand as much or become as numerous as their predecessors. These would include those agencies servicing Spanish-speaking groups, Indians, Chinese, Japanese, and Southern Mountain Whites.

As already noted, the increasing number of special departments or assignments on intergroup relations that have been established by organizations or institutes having a much broader primary base is one of the significant trends of the past decade. These Departments now account for 16% of the listings and 12% of the professionals working.

While activities and services have expanded enormously in the South in recent years, it should be noted that only about 10% of all agency operations are based in the 17 Southern states now faced with school desegregation problems. On the basis of population alone, to say nothing of need, there would have to be three times as many professional workers in the South as there are to be proportionate to the rest of the nation.

The present level of expenditures in the field reveals some interesting trends. Government now accounts for about 20% of the agency funds. The amount being expended at all levels of government is likely to increase. In 1957 a bill was introduced into the Senate that would have called for an agency and personnel service program of $5 million a year for the next five years in the intergroup relations field.

Similarly, the expansion of private expenditures appears likely. The magnificent assistance which the Fund for the Republic, for example, has rendered the field represents a continuation of the historic interest which this nation's great philanthropic sponsors have had in the field of human rights and freedom.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS OFFICIALS
ROOM 209, 426 WEST 58TH STREET, NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JU 6-0782

REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE SECRETARY
January-May, 1960

These have been four unusually busy months in NAIRO's life, not just for the national office and staff but in the cities and regions as well. For once, happily, self-generated regional and local activities overshadow national developments.

National Office

STAFF — We have arrived at the point where, as prophesied, the clerical work is too much for one person -- while the budget does not allow for two. Billing and processing of memberships and publications orders, plus normal office administration, now take all of Frankye Brown's time. Our part-time clerical worker, currently Mrs. Agnes Wade, is a one-woman shipping department -- 12 hours weekly, often overtime. I have been forced to send most of my dictation out for transcription by a commercial service, and the letter shop has been doing an increasing amount of our mailing.

The Treasurer's Report will certainly reflect this situation in disproportionately high expenditures for part-time staff, printing, postage and mailing services, and the transcription service. These budget allocations will have to be reviewed, and I know that I must ask that the part-time clerk be made a permanent fixture (instead of coming in "as needed") -- at $15 weekly, for 12 hours.

PUBLICATIONS — The flood of publications orders since January has been gratifying if somewhat overwhelming. Income from the Journal and Civil Rights in the Nation's Capital is rapidly approaching budget estimates; only the Directory is lagging.

Editorial Board chairman Ted Leskes will report on Journal subscriptions, but it can be "leaked" here that we had to have a second printing of Volume I, Number 1. You will have received Volume I, Number 2 (the fat special issue on "Big Think"), by the time the Board meets.

The civil rights report has been selling well, thanks largely to the efforts of the Commission chairman, Ben Segal. We have sold 3,131 copies to date, leaving some 1,869 reports on our shelves.

I think that you will be disappointed to learn that we have sold only 321 copies of the Directory. Our total was 2,500. Orders continue to trickle in, however, and it is true that many of our members still do not realize that they must purchase it.

- m o r e -

The long-delayed Manpower Utilization Commission report ("Guidance, Training and Apprenticeship Factors Affecting Minority Groups"), edited by Chester Gray, has been offset and distributed. It was necessary to do this through the National Office, and the total cost was $487, slightly above the $400 budget allocation.

The Membership Roster was designed, compiled and mimeographed by Frankye Brown. It was, as usual, a mammoth job -- but apparently appreciated by our members. Frankye again deserves the Board's special commendation.

Two Newsletters have been prepared and mailed since January, and a third is in process. You will notice that we had an unusually large number of enclosures with each, including the SSSP-SPSSI Joint Newsletter and the book, Race Riot, donated by its author.

OFFICE PROCEDURE — We have purchased the new manual typewriter authorized in the budget, for $12 less than the estimate. It is a sheer delight, especially since it arrived as my old Royal began its death agonies. Frankye's electric typewriter is gasping and wheezing, but should last until next year.

We changed mailing services -- with an unpleasant and unexpected addressograph plate cost of $90 -- after persistent complaints from members who felt unloved and unwanted. Our check of the plates from the old service revealed many glaring errors, confirming members' grievances and our suspicions.

Intense activity at regional and local levels, and several special mailings (Journal and membership promotion), forced us into the reprinting of NAIRO brochures and envelopes, with stationery due to follow. This will also be reflected, I fear, in the Treasurer's Report.

MEMBERSHIP — Fran Cousens' report on membership will reveal that we have recouped the losses from our annual (March) purge of two-year delinquents. We had passed 600 before that pruning of our list, but dropped to 568 afterwards.

Alma Scurlock (Washington, D.C., membership chairman) is presenting one By-Laws proposal regarding membership qualifications, and this will be discussed at the Board meeting. I will be asking for reconsideration of our present policy of carrying delinquent members for an entire year; the tendency of some of our members to pay their dues at Conferencetime notwithstanding, I want to suggest that delinquent members be dropped from the roster on July 1st of each year.

PERSONNEL REGISTRY — Our Personnel Registry has not been as active this year as last. We did post 12 openings, however, and I suspect that we may have been a little more instrumental in filling them than we were in the past. The number of members listed with the Registry increases steadily, as does the number of people who join NAIRO for this service.

The flow of mail and people-in-person requesting job information and career guidance continues unabated. Form letters have helped in many cases, but the need for personal correspondence and interviews is still enormous.

Travel

PRESIDENT — Fred Routh started his presidential tour on April 16th, with visits scheduled in Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, San Jose, Los Angeles, and Denver. Helen Amerman, Louise Blackham, John Buggs, and John Binkley mapped out full schedules for all cities, and our ever-radiant president may be a mite weary when next you see him.

I hope that his presidential tour sets a precedent, with perhaps a different region singled out each year for such attention. The money, which comes from my travel fund, is certainly well-spent! The President of NAIRO would not hold that office if he were not a "man of stature" in the field, and to his office he brings experience and competence not possessed by the Executive Secretary. His is a new face, with a new message, and he will be utilized in new ways. All of these factors insure a good audience among members, potential members, and the general public. No less important is the fact that his presence, as official representative of NAIRO, counteracts the "Mr. NAIRO" image that I have tried to avoid. I commend such a tour to all presidents who follow Fred ....

EXECUTIVE SECRETARY — Since the Detroit Board meeting, I have visited Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Chicago (twice), Milwaukee, Minneapolis-St. Paul, Baltimore, Washington, Boston, and Cleveland before the Board meeting -- with St. Louis, Buffalo, and Toledo already scheduled for later in the spring.

Main talking points on these visits were the "Big Think" program and the formation of NAIRO Chapters. Many of our members had laid good groundwork beforehand, and have pursued both goals energetically since then.

As I said earlier, the regional and local activity has almost overshadowed national program. At the Board meeting, you will hear reports of the Middle South Regional Conference in Washington on May 6 and the forthcoming Great Lakes Regional Conference in Toledo on June 11th and 12th. You will review Chapter charter applications (or, at least, receive definite progress reports) from NAIRO groups in: Philadelphia, Chicago, Detroit, Pittsburgh, New York City, Minneapolis-St. Paul, San Francisco, and Los Angeles. It is quite possible that Cleveland, Denver, and Boston will also be "in process."

Almost more exciting is the way in which "Big Think" has been received -- even before the special issue of the JOURNAL was published!! It is the subject of the two regional conferences reported; it is also the subject of intensive study and discussion in Philadelphia, Chicago, New York City, and possibly other localities.

Internship

INTERNSHIP PROGRAM — The Educational and Professional Training Committee plans to offer specific recommendations on the National Internship Program, but all of you are aware that it has lagged badly this year. I think that it is legitimate for me to note here that I will recommend to the EPT Committee that -- barring the receipt of one large internship grant, still barely possible -- we consider the program terminated as of July 1st. It is tragic to abandon so early an experiment that has been so successful, but it has proved to be almost impossible to secure the necessary foundation grants. Even as I make the recommendation, I have the strong feeling that circumstances and financial support will demand its resurrection at some point in the future ....

-m o r e -

SUBJECT: Project Proposal

In the course of attempting to initiate the project assigned by the Board to NAIRO's Special Interdisciplinary Committee, Edward Olsen and I met with Wayne A.R. Leys, Dean of the Graduate Division and Professor of Philosophy at Roosevelt University, in Chicago. Dean Leys suggested an inquiry somewhat different from that originally contemplated but -- in our collective view, after some discussion -- just as appropriate and perhaps even more exciting.

I agreed to draft an outline of the new project for submission, after review by Dean Leys and Dr. Olsen, to the Board. Since it is a new project and will require approaches to foundations for financial support, and since Dr. Olsen himself suggests that it might appropriately be assigned to another committee, perhaps in a different locality (i.e. New York), Board action is necessary.

In essence, the year-long project, would take the form of an inquiry into INTERGROUP RELATIONS AND THE PUBLIC INTEREST, focusing on such questions as:

(a) The nature of "the public interest" in the area of civil rights, as defined by intergroup relations workers and by others.

(b) The role of government in the area of civil rights.

(c) Possible conflict between civil rights laws and individual civil liberties.

(d) The role of self-regulation by non-governmental institutions in achieving "the public interest" in the area of civil rights.

The attached foundation appeal draft describes the project in some detail.

Frank J. Sorauf, quoted in Philosophy and the Public Interest, enumerates various definitions of "the public interest" found in contemporary literature: (1) as commonly-held interests or values, dictating decisions that serve the ends of the whole public rather than those of some sector of the public; (2) as the wise or superior interest ("doing today the things that men of intelligence and good will would wish, five or ten years hence, had been done"); (3) as moral imperative or, in Walter Lippmann's words, "what men would choose if they saw clearly, thought rationally, acted disinterestedly and benevolently; (4) as a balance of interests, consisting in the elaboration of compromise between conflicting groups; and (5) as vague values, broad enough to elicit widespread agreement, but too wide to be relevant to the struggle for policy influence.

"The public interest," however defined, has been invoked in endless controversies as a justification for governmental regulation. Paramount here is the problem of determining that public interest, and Leys and Perry ask, with regard to zoning ordinances (as one example), whether regulation is justified (a) by a Benthamite calculation of aggregate interest or (b) by some ideal or (c) by the relative strength of conflicting pressure groups. Commenting on your draft, I would add to the first full paragraph on page 2: "Leys and Perry recognized that 'the public interest' is often determined by the relative strength of conflicting pressure groups, but noted that even in this case there is a normative ideal which may or may not be respected, viz., the application of pressure within the rules. A political determination, for example, ought to be made in such a way that all parts of the population have access to the decision-making process. A legal determination should be made by 'due process.' The procedural conception of 'the public interest', though different from conceptions of a common good or a general welfare, is none-the-less normative."

Having determined the nature and extent of "the public interest" in a given area, one is still faced with the questions of (a) the limits of effectiveness of governmental regularion, (b) the government or governmental agency to have jurisdiction in a given regulatory activity, and (c) the proper occasions for regulation in the public interest.

Government regulation or action must, in many respects, restrict personal (and corporate) interest; legitimate sanction for this restriction comes from reference to a public interest which in case of conflict is viewed as superior to private interest. Regulations that protect one man's rights may interfere with another man's rights, in other words, and the definition and determination of "the public interest" that justifies this interference become moot points.

There have been counter-trends to governmental regulation in the public interest. Non-governmental institutions and agencies have set up their own regulations and regulatory machinery (1) to forestall governmental regulation, (2) to cooperate with and sometimes control the regulatory agencies of government, and (3) for other purposes.

Whatever the focus -- majority will, minority protection or individual rights; governmental regulation, self-regulation or non-regulation -- and whatever the point of departure -- civil rights or civil liberties; interracial relations or interreligious relations -- of such an inquiry as that proposed, its importance is clear: "the public interest" is inextricably bound to intergroup relations work.

This is the background for the attached proposal.

NOTE: Material above has been lifted boldly and bodily from Philosophy and the Public Interest, a report prepared by Professors Leys and Charner Marquis Perry for the Committee to Advance Original Work in Philosophy, an agency of the Western Division of the American Philosophical Association, in 1950.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS OFFICIALS
426 West 58th Street, New York 19, New York

"INTERGROUP RELATIONS AND THE PUBLIC INTEREST" DRAFT FOUNDATION APPEAL

How do intergroup relations agencies and practitioners define "the public interest" in attempting to secure for racial and ethnic minorities the basic rights exercised by the majority?

How is "the public interest" in the area of civil rights viewed by racial and ethnic minority groups? by the majority? by government?

What is the regulatory role of government in the area of civil rights?

Is there any conflict between civil rights laws and individual civil liberties?

What self-regulation of non-governmental institutions and agencies is suggested by "the public interest" in the area of civil rights?

And, perhaps for another inquiry but noted here to indicate that it is not forgotten, what is "the public interest" and the role of government in the area of interreligious relations?

To launch an inquiry into these problems -- representative of the vast and complex area of interrelationship of majority, minority and individual rights in the context of "the public interest" and intergroup relations, the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials (NAIRO) seeks a one-year grant of $9,000.

The purpose of the inquiry is to find answers, working hypotheses or, at the very least, clearer definition of the problems in this area. The philosophical or conceptual significance of such an inquiry seems obvious; indeed, the whole question of the nature of "the public interest" and its determination in a democratic society is a subject of continuing discussion and definition.

In the field of intergroup relations, however, there is increasing evidence of a practical and pressing need for such an inquiry and for the consensus or at least guidance that it might produce.

The need is demonstrated most vividly perhaps by debate at state and municipal levels on the coverage proposed in Fair Housing Practices legislation: shall the law banning discrimination in sale or rental of housing apply to the individual homeowner, or would such coverage abridge him of his rights as "master in his own home?" When, in other words, shall profit from sale or rental warrant regulation by government in "the public interest?"

Possible conflict between "the public interest" and the rights of the individual may be found in another related area: the use of quotas ("benign," to be sure) in order to achieve or maintain integrated housing. Here, "the public interest" might be defined by a governmental or non-governmental agency as requiring that individual buyers or lessees be denied -- above a certain quota -- their right to purchase or rent a home, in order that integration may exist in that building or development.

A realtor's challenge of the New York City Fair Housing Practices Law was overruled recently, despite spirited protests from the plaintiff, by a judge who declared that the realtor "must yield to what legislative authority deems is for the common good." (This is not to suggest that "the public interest" and "the common good" are synonomous concepts, but it would be interesting to know if the magistrate distinguishes between them." More such challenges can be expected.

The efforts to circumvent the residential segregation that produces de facto school segregation, by transporting pupils to schools outside their home neighborhoods, can be viewed in "the public interest" context, especially when majority group parents allege violation of individual or even "community" rights.

Civil rights workers and civil libertarians have come occasionally to a parting of minds, most recently in Washington, D.C., over the treatment to be accorded bigots who seek publicly to arouse hatred of minority groups. "The public interest" and individual freedom of expression are here the respective rallying points.

There is ample background for such an inquiry. The wealth of literature on "the public interest" ranges from Locke, Rousseau, and Mill to such contemporary philosophers and political scientists as Walter Lippmann, Robert Dahl, and Wayne A.R. Leys. While little has been written on "the public interest" in the area of civil rights, the wealth of experience there awaits only the researching and the writing. For this present project, however, impetus, inspiration, and direction will be derived largely from the report, PHILOSOPHY AND THE PUBLIC INTEREST, prepared by Professors Leys and Charner Marquis Perry for the Committee to Advance Original Work in Philosophy, an agency of the Western Division of the American Philosophical Association. Here, the philosophical framework is set for the consideration of civil rights concerns that are somewhat unique and certainly immediate.

Broader context for the inquiry is provided by NAIRO's current program of study and discussion aimed at helping the intergroup relations field achieve consensus on its goals, directions and priorities for the decade ahead. Discussion of such topics as the nature of intergroup relations practice, the relationship between public and private agencies, the changing status of the Negro American, and the changing interrelationships among religious groups impinges often and inevitably on questions of "the public interest" and group and individual rights. The proposed inquiry will both provide and derive content (and context) from the broader exploration.

> The NAIRO program, launched early in 1960, has included a national consultation, the papers and reports from which were published as a special issue of THE JOURNAL OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS; the establishment of several local study groups; and two regional study conferences. A second national consultation in September, the publication of additional papers on "decade ahead" concerns, and intensive discussion at the NAIRO Annual Conference in November will complete the program's first phase.

The method proposed for this inquiry borrows heavily from that used by the Committee to Advance Original Work in Philosophy in its 1958-1959 exploration. The essential ingredients are competent staff, extensive correspondence, expert consultation, and publication of the final report. These steps are suggested:

(1) Establishment by NAIRO of a small project advisory committee to work with a competent research person in the preparation of a basic document that will set forth the basic issues and problems, with suggested definitions and dimensions.

(2) Circulation of this document among a selected group of philosophers, lawyers, political scientists, sociologists, intergroup relations practitioners, minority group leaders, and others. It is suggested that some of these, at least, be offered a modest reading fee. All will be pressed for written comment and suggestions.

(3) Preparation of a report, similar in nature to PHILOSOPHY AND THE PUBLIC INTEREST and incorporating -- as consensus, where possible -- the comments received. This document, still probably in mimeographed form, would be distributed to those invited to participate in one or more consultations.

(4) Organization of one or more consultations, at which a small, representative group would discuss the report and dictate its final content. Papers on specific issues might be solicited for presentation at the meeting(s) or invited as appendices of the final report.

(5) Publication and distribution of the final report, as a special issue of THE JOURNAL OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS. NAIRO would undertake, as one of its contributions to the project, to stimulate discussion of the report in regional meetings and local groups.

Financing of the project is required, over and above the contribution-in-kind that NAIRO is prepared to make. Salary must be provided for the part-time services of a competent research person, probably a social scientist from a college or university. Reading fees for some of the commentators are suggested as a means of encouraging thoughtful contributions to the report. Expenses of those attending the one or more consultations, and perhaps of those on the project committee at one or two planning meetings, must be paid. Mimeographing, postage, and other out-of-pocket "overhead" expenses require a modest allocation. Finally, partial subsidization of the special issue of the JOURNAL is required to cover increased size and to permit free distribution of copies over and above normal circulation.

Salary, Project Director (part-time) - - - - - -	$ 3,750.
Consultants' reading fees - - - - - - - - - - - - -	1,000.
Consultation expenses, one meeting - - - - - - - -	1,000.
Committee expenses, two meetings - - - - - - - - -	600.
Secretarial help (part-time) - - - - - - - - - - -	1,000.
Postage, supplies, etc. - - - - - - - - - - - - - -	500.
Book and pamphlet purchase - - - - - - - - - - - - -	150.
Report publication (partial subsidization of special issue of JOURNAL) - - - - - - - - - - -	1,000.
TOTAL:	$ 9,000.

(NOTE TO NAIRO BOARD: I append the statement of actual expenses of the Leys-Perry project.

"Here are the actual expenditures for the project on 'Philosophy and the Public Interest':

Wayne Leys and Charner Perry @ $40 per day. . . .	$ 3,270.00
22 consultants @ $25 to $100 each	1,125.00
Wayne Leys for administering the project.	600.00
Secretarial help	942.47
Postage and supplies	276.04
Misc.	101.06
Travel expense of Committee	383.14
Books and pamphlets purchased	149.34
Antioch Press, printing & mailing 2000 copies . .	878.43

"This financial record assumes an absolute minimum of red tape and willingness of the project director to do the work in his spare time. We asked the Rockefeller Foundation for $7950. Rockefeller Foundation has had a $10,000 limit on grants that can be approved by their staff without Board consideration. The money became available in June, 1958, and the project was terminated July 31, 1959."

Dear John:

I know you will be happy about the prospects of being able to print the entire Housing Journal (see attached). What about the funds for the mailing of this journal?

Where do we stand on the travel expenditure for Emily K. Young? Will you be able to reimburse her for the Pittsburgh air trip?

George Culberson and I have been able to work out a meeting for the morning of December 10th when he will be in Philadelphia. He plans to bring most of th e Treasurer's material with him and we will have a session and hope to be able to talk about the Treasurer's duties.

I don't know whether I told you in Pittsburgh but we were able to work out a meeting between Bill Cousins of our staff and Harry Cohen of George's staff, who has been keeping the NAIRO books for George. Bill Cousins will be keeping the books for me and I hope the briefing Bill got from Harry Cohen will help in an orderly transition of the bookkeeping procedure.

I am hopeful of getting to New York within the next few weeks. When I do, I will try to arrange to meet with you so that you can brief me about the Board meeting in Pittsburgh. If you should happen to be coming through Philadelphia before then, please let me know. Perhaps we can get together sooner. I am hopeful that NAIRO can do more in the direction of raising some money from its Board member affiliate associates and through its local groups.

Cordially,

Dear Margaret:

I have just had a couple of sessions with George Culberson to brief me on the transfer of the treasurer's functions and duties. The transfer of monies and accounts and the disbursements should be accomplished without any hitch.

From George I understand it is customary for the treasurer to be appointed chairman of the finance committee. If you contemplate doing this, I would be anxious to select a good committee. I would be ready to make some suggestions right now except that I can't remember all of the members of the new board. As soon as I get a copy of the board minutes from John Lassoe, I will be prepared to make some recommendations to you for membership of the finance committee. I would be anxious to meet with the committee hopefully the day before the next board meeting.

Has a date been set for the board meeting and do I understand it will be in New York City?

I would also like to have some information about the decision of the board to raise $1,000 from board members of intergroup relations agencies. I have some ideas about how this might be done.

Dear Fred:

I am asking you and several other NAIRO Board members to serve on the Finance Committee.

As President Elect I think it would be helpful to NAIRO, to the Finance Committee and to you if you would be on the Committee.

I would anticipate that we would meet the day before- or several hours before each Board meeting.

May I count on you?

Dear Burt:

Unfortunately I cannot be in Chicago on the evening of March 5. I am due in LaFayette, Indiana on the 6th for a speech to the Panel of Americans and will not arrive in Chicago until the evening of the 6th (Friday).

As to the sale of stock now held by NAIRO, I believe we should not unduly restrict our ability to dispose of the stock at an auspicious time. Whatever mechanisms are set up for disposal of stock should be flexible and capable of swift action.

Regarding the bonding of the treasurer, I think this is a good idea. At SRC all who have access to the safe, who can sign checks, or who deal with financial matters are bonded.

As to a fund-raising drive, I believe we would have better success if we properly approached several of the foundations. Some of them are beginning to think in terms of general support, rather than limiting their support to specific programs. This needs further exploration.

Best regards to you.

Meeting of the Finance Committee

Would it be possible for us to meet briefly on Thursday evening, March 5th, before 9 o'clock, in Chicago just prior to the NAIRO Board Meeting, 9:30 a.m., on Friday, March 6th.

In addition to reviewing our current financial status, I thought we might discuss the sale of the stock now held by NAIRO and the special fund drive so that we might be in a position to make some recommendations to the Board. Another subject for discussion might be the recommendation in the auditor's report that the Treasurer be bonded.

Please let me hear from you.

Dear Mr. Fleming:

NAIRO's Board of Directors is asking your help in making possible continuation of the Internship Program. The modest sum of $1,000 is needed this year to supplement funds available for the administration of the program, now in its third year.

Specifically, we are asking you to transmit to your individual board or commission members our request for financial support of this program. If you prefer, and if you will provide us with the proper list, we would be happy to write directly to them. We are in effect asking for the type of pledge made so generously by NAIRO members to help finance the program in its first two years.

Since your agency participated in the Internship Program in the past, I know that you and your board members recognize the value and significance of helping to bring qualified persons into the field, and the importance of NAIRO's role in this process. Modest contributions - perhaps equivalent to the cost of NAIRO membership - from board members would serve both as a symbol of that recognition and as a concrete aid to our work.

Contributions to NAIRO are, of course, tax deductible. They will be welcome in any amount, and we shall deeply appreciate your cooperation and your board members' support.

May I hear from you soon?

Sincerely yours,

Burton I. Gordin

SUBJECT: Financial Projection - August 1 to September 16, 1960

Attached is a report of our current financial status which will be helpful to you at the Board meeting next month in Philadelphia when we will consider whether we can continue to maintain our national office.

From my conversations with John Lassoe, I would gather that there is reason for some optimism that we may receive enough money from our current appeal to see us through 1960 at the level of current operating expenses.

We should have a clearer financial picture when we meet September 16-17.

SUBJ: Proposed Recommendations

DATE: August 3, 1960

Several suggestions made at the last Board Meeting have been referred to our Committee with the request that we submit recommendations to the next meeting of the Board of Directors on September 16-17.

Please consider carefully all the suggestions and indicate your opinion on the form which is provided. I will then coordinate the results of this poll and prepare the recommendations for Board consideration. You will receive a copy of the recommendations prior to the Board meeting.

1. A proposal to add a fourth category of membership was submitted to the Board at its last meeting by Mrs. Alma Scurlock of the Washington, D.C. Commission and recently named recruiter for the D. C. area.

2. The finance committee suggests that we consider a sliding dues scale based on salary levels. If you approve of this arrangement, please indicate what categories should be established, ie. salary range -- annual dues. You probably know that there is precedent for such an arrangement in many other professional organizations and societies including the Bar Association and the Teachers Federations, among others. The method of determining such a scale will require careful analysis and discussion by the Board and, for this reason, I am anxious to obtain your reaction to this suggestion.

3. A plan to change the billing date of annual dues from the present system whereby all members are billed as of January 1 of each year to the individual billing system whereby dues are to be paid on each anniversary of the date of joining. You should know that the latter system has been discussed with both John Lassoe and Frankye Brown who feel that although this will entail some extra work for the national office, that it can be done. The suggested two dollars ($2) "service charge" will hopefully encourage members to pay their dues within the period of grace, thereby precluding the extra work of deleting names from the roster and then re-entering them.

4. Awarding prizes for recruiting members is a plan which is used in many voluntary associations. Please indicate whether you favor such a plan at all, whether you approve of the prize suggested or if you have an alternative suggestion.

It is very important that I hear from you immediately on all these matters. Please return the opinionaire and any additional suggestions you wish submitted to the Board for their consideration no later than August 29 so I will have sufficient time to analyze the responses, prepare the recommendations and let you know the results before the Board meeting.

I shall greatly appreciate your cooperation.

National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials

March 28, 1960

ARTICLE IV - MEMBERSHIP

A. Membership shall be limited to individuals and shall be of four classes:

1. Active: Any person primarily engaged in a professional staff capacity, whether salaried or volunteer; or any person recognized as an authority in the field of intergroup relations or its related areas.

2. Associate: Any person serving as a member of the governing board of any agency or commission; or otherwise engaged in the intergroup relations work of an agency or commission related to this field.

3. Participating: Any person, subscribing to the basic objectives and program of the Association, who does not fall into one of the three other categories.

4. Student: Any person enrolled in a recognized college or university with the intention of entering the field of intergroup relations or the social sciences.

B. The Board of Directors shall have authority over admission to membership in NAIRO, but may delegate to the Membership Committee, or its Chairman, or to the Executive Secretary, the power to receive and act upon applications for active membership, provided that such delegatees shall, wherever feasible, consult with active NAIRO members in the area from which the application is received. Subject to review by the membership at the annual business meeting, the Board of Directors may suspend or remove from membership, after opportunity for hearings and fair notice thereof, any person whose conduct is deemed harmful to NAIRO.

ARTICLE V - DUTIES AND PRIVILEGES OF MEMBW
ARTICLE V - DUTIES AND PRIVILIGES OF MEMBERSHIP

A. The Association shall establish and maintain a schedule of annual dues and fees for the four classes of membership:

1. Each Active member shall be entitled to: vote at any membership meeting; hold office; participate in conferences; serve, by appointment, on committees; receive all regular and special information services; and utilize the services of the Personnel Exchange and such other special services as shall be determined by the Board.

2. Each Associate member shall be entitled to: participate in conferences; serve, by appointment, on committees; and receive all regular information services.

3. Each Participating member shall be entitled to receive information services (except the Journal of Intergroup Relations) and to participate in conferences.

4. Each Student member shall be entitled to receive all regular informational services and to participate in conferences of the Association.

5. Any organization or agency may subscribe to the regular informational services of the Association. Special information or other services may be rendered upon request, with or without charge, as the Board of Directors may determine.

B. Any person having qualified for membership in the Association shall be eligible for renewal of membership in his particular category (except students who shall have completed their studies or are no longer in school) even when working on jobs not specifically related to the field of intergroup relations; provided such person shall either demonstrate interest in the field through continuing volunteer participation in intergroup relations, or shall remain away from active professional intergroup relations employment for a period not to exceed three years.

MISCELLANEOUS RECOMMENDATIONS

SCHEDULE OF DUES

1. Active members will pay dues of $15.00 per year.

2. Associate Members will pay dues of $15.00 per year.

3. Participating Members will pay dues of $5.00 per year.

4. Student Members will pay dues of $5.00 per year.

DUES PAYMENTS

1. Dues for the first year will be paid at the time a member joins the Association and on each anniversary of that date thereafter.

2. Members who are in arrears for a period of six months will be dropped from the membership roster.

3. A delinquent member who is dropped from the membership roster can renew his membership upon payment of one year's dues ($15.00) plus an additional sum of $2.00, or a total of $17.00.

PRIZES FOR MEMBERSHIP RECRUITMENT:

1. The member who recruits the greatest number of new members in the one-year period between national conferences shall be entitled to a prize which will consist of the travel expenses to the site of the next national conference.

2. The local chapter which shows the greatest increase of new members in the one-year period between national conferences shall be entitled to select one of its members to receive a prize which will consist of the travel expenses to the site of the next national conference.

SLIDING DUES SCALE FOR ACTIVE MEMBERS

Although the dues schedule for Associate, Participating and Student members shall remain constant, a sliding dues scale shall be established for Active members and shall be based on professional salary.

Discrete categories will be established for each salary range and dues determined for each salary category. Upon joining the Association, a member will indicate his salary range; when a member's salary category is changed either in the same agency or by joining the staff of another agency, he will so inform the national office. This information will be held confidential and will not be released to anyone other than the staff of the national office; however quantitative information, bearing no names, can be compiled and released when the need arises.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS OFFICIALS
426 West 58th Street, New York 19, New York

NAIRO MEMBERSHIP:
CATEGORIES, ROLES, DUES, SERVICES, RECRUITMENT

At its meeting in Cincinnati on May 20-21, the NAIRO Board of Directors discussed a variety of proposals regarding membership categories, the dues scale, and membership roles. They asked the Membership Committee to consider these and to submit recommendations at the September 16-17 Board meeting.

The most detailed proposal, was submitted by Mrs. Alma Scurlock, ~~is attached.~~ In essence, it proposes division of members into four categories:

(a) Active: professionals in this or related fields.
(b) Associate: Board members or volunteers in intergroup relations agencies.
(c) Participating: all others who subscribe to NAIRO objectives.
(d) Student: enrolled students preparing for intergroup relations work or the social sciences.

Services would remain unchanged, although the new category (Participating) would not be entitled to receive THE JOURNAL OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS.

Not included in the proposed By-Laws change (above), but urged by Mrs. Scurlock, was a reduction in Associate dues (to unspecified amount) and establishment of $5 dues for Participating members. Her letter, also attached, outlines her reasons.

The Finance Committee, in discussing various means of solving the NAIRO financial plight, asked consideration of "a sliding scale of dues based on salaries so that better paid members could pay more. Dues could start at $10 and, in $5 multiples, could go to $25.00."

In Board discussion, there was some support for the separation of non-professionals from professionals into two or more categories, but no clear consensus. Some feared that this would make non-professionals feel unwanted ("second class citizens," in effect), and others did not want to so stress NAIRO's professionalism. Others suggested that non-professionals might be served better in a separate category, expressing the feeling that NAIRO was after all a professional association. The question was again raised: do we really want non-professional members? if so, how do we get them and keep them?

NOTE: In the March 1 tabulation of members, just over 100 of the 522 Active members were Board or Commission members.

In Board discussion, there was little or no support for the proposal to reduce dues for Board or Commission members, regardless of the category in which they were placed. Some felt that most Board or Commission members were better able, if less likely, to pay the $15 dues than the professionals. There was no real discussion of the Participating membership category, although one or two wondered what these members would get (and appreciate) if they did not receive the JOURNAL. At least one person, perhaps after the meeting, suggested a $10 membership category (unnamed) that would entitle the person to the JOURNAL and special publications, but NOT to the Personnel Registry, Newsletter or other professional services.

NAIRO MEMBERSHIP (2)

In Board discussion, no support was heard for the suggested sliding dues scale based on professional salary. One or two did feel that professional dues could be higher than $15, but others felt that, for some, this figure was already too high.

In private conversation, Harold Murray of the American Jewish Committee suggested that laymen be recruited — perhaps as a special council or committee or auxiliary, but not as Actual NAIRO members — to help undergird professional development by creating a public image of the prefession and by raising funds for NAIRO. Dues for this category should be $25, in return for such minimal services as the JOURNAL, an occasional (special) newsletter, and perhaps occasional special meetings. These would be, in effect, the "Friends of NAIRO." Their participation would help NAIR in publicity and finances, and would help the field by developing among the public and among these same laymen a better understanding of the profession and the professional.

NOTE: In line with discussion of professional and non-professional dues structure, it might be noted that the American Society for Public Administration has the following scale: senior member, $8; sustaining member ("indicating special interest in the Society"), $15; junior member (28 years or under), $4; student member, $4. ASPA charges members, albeit at a lower rate than non-members, for some of its services and regular and special publications, however.

Generalizing, it might be said that non-professional members have a higher "mortality" rate than professional members, although there are some who have belonged to NAIRO for years. Many join when they attend an Annual Conference, especially one in their own city. Others join because their agency (usually small, unstaffed FEPC's) pays their dues. Still others respond to a special plea from their staff person.

For most non-professional members, the major NAIRO service or activity seems to be the JOURNAL and an occasional Annual Conference. A few participate in local Chapter activities, and a few have commented favorably on the Newsletter. I judge that most feel, however, that they are supporting NAIRO rather than participating in it.

Special mention must be made of a substantial if shifting category among non-professionals: those, not students, who join NAIRO to take advantage of the Personnel Registry — those in other words who see NAIRO as a path to a career in intergroup relations. (Many students join, of course, for the same reason.)

It seems helpful to recap NAIRO's services and publications, available to all members (Active, Associate, Student) automatically or on request:

(1) THE JOURNAL OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS
(2) Special publications (e.g. Manpower Utilization Report)
(3) NAIRO Newsletter
(4) Various publications that we are asked to distribute (e.g. RACE RIOT)
(5) Personnel Registry notices (on request)
(6) Chapter membership (automatic)
(7) Annual Conference attendance, without fee (It has been recommended to the Executive Committee, however, that a $4 fee be instituted, for members and non-members alike)
(8) Department membership (automatic)
(9) Commission membership (on request)

REPORT OF THE SUB-COMMITTEE ON PROGRAM DEVELOPMENT
(With Recommendations As Approved by the Board of NAIRO)
April 12, 1957

The Committee assembled at 10:00 a.m. the morning of March 25, 1957 in the offices of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, 43 West 57th Street, New York City. Present: Arnold Aronson, Dan Dodson, Burton Gordin substituting for George Schermer, David Danzig, Alexander Miller, Louis Radelet, Charles Livermore, and Harold Lett. Dave Freeman of the Fund for the Republic attended the earlier part of the session.

FUND REPORT Dave Freeman reported upon developments, indicating that matching funds were assured to the point that the Professional Development Program could be initiated as early as April 1. The Columbia and New World Foundations are providing matching funds and NCCJ is diverting professional training funds to the project. The Fund for the Republic hopes to be able by April 1 to produce its $20,000 administrative grant, and the additional $30,00 allocation toward interneship subsidies. There are still in prospect, matching funds that may be applied to the project from McGregor, Field, Whitney and the Kansas City Foundations. Mr. Freeman stated that these do not represent commitments at the moment, nor are the assured matching grants mentioned earlier agreed upon for the second year of project operation. The Fund for the Republic will select the agencies to which their grant of $30,000 is being made, with the idea of assuring a reasonable spread of interneships among public as well as private agencies, and among local, state and federal bodies represented in the public agencies. It was emphasized again that the selection of local internes was the sole perogative of the agency for or through whom the grant was secured.

The Fund for the Republic had not considered a common starting date, assuming that each agency would start its operation as soon as matching funds were assigned. Committee consensus, however, determined that the project would be served better if a starting date were agreed upon, sufficiently far ahead that the machinery for supervision and controls could be created without dangerous haste. It was agreed the Committee present to the Board its

RECOMMENDATION, That the Administrator or Executive Secretary begin his duties as soon after April 1 as possible, but not later than June 1; and that all agencies participating in the first year's training project, begin the interneship operations on or about September 3, 1957. (Among other administrative reasons, this recommendation stressed the need for comparable experiences of all internes and supervisors, as they would be called upon to participate in the seminars to which the project is committed.)

GROUND RULES The following were a number of "ground rules" agreed upon between the Fund representative and the sub-committee members, for recommendation to the Board for consideration and adoption:

1. Although the round figure of $5000 has been used as the size of interneship grant, this is not intended to fix a salary floor, in the sum of compensation to which an interne is entitled. This is intended to remain a matter as between agency and interne.

2. Grants for interneships to public agencies may be seen as a different and more difficult problem, inasmuch as it is unlikely that such grant could be entered into the public agency book-keeping arrangements.

3. Fixed standards regarding agency operation, training routine, etc., have not and will not be set up by the Fund for the Republic in their selection of participating agencies. It is possible that an outline for "information guides" may be prepared as an aid to agencies, as long as it is mutually understood that such guides would not be binding upon the agency; e.g.

   a. It is implicit in the program that each interne be given as broad an experience as possible: (1) that national agencies provide experience in local or regional offices wherever possible; (2) that all agencies attempt to expose the interne to work with ethnic, religious and racial groups.

   b. It may be advisable to arrange that adjustment of travel funds be made for agencies and internes from geographic areas far removed from seminar location.

4. It is expected that the administrator will schedule his work that he may spend adequate time with each participating agency, in periodic intervals satisfactory to the Board. In collaboration with the Board, or such committee as the Board may designate for the purpose, he will assist participating agencies in assuring that the broadest and most effective training experience is being given, and that his observations and evaluations may be so recorded as to form a body of study data of value to the sponsors.

5. At least one participating agency is exploring the possibility that academic credits be made available through the interneship program. No thought has been given to this, and no recommendations are forthcoming.

6. It is suggested, again without specific recommendation that would be binding, that consideration be given to some form of agreement or moral commitment, that an interneship recipient remain in the field of work for at least one year, if possible, after completion of his interneship. Implicit in this suggestion is that the agency accept a similar moral commitment to aid in the placement of an interne whose work would justify such aid.

PROJECT NAME RECONSIDERED — A move to reconsider the name of the project as originally proposed to the Board and accepted by it, gave expression to considerable dissatisfaction with the "Residency" appelation. It was felt that this implied a professional level of operation that would be misleading, if not presumptuous. On the other hand, "apprenticeship" suggested a level beneath that upon which we believe the project is operating. It was formally moved, seconded and adopted that it be the Committee's RECOMMENDATION, That the Board be requested to rescind the action in which the term "Residency" was adopted within the formal name of the project; and that the word "Internship" be used in its stead.

With further reference to the project name, rather than set up in formal fashion any number of named "Internships", it was the Committee's RECOMMENDATION, That the Sub-Committee on Program Development formulate a list of names or a roster of persons, now deceased, whose names were prominent in this field of endeavor, submitting such roster of names to donors of gifts or grants with the request that their grants be known by a name acceptable to the donor.

It was further felt that the proper name of the program, viz: The National Intergroup Relations Professional Development program (NIRPeD) was ponderous, even though descriptive. The Committee took no action except to suggest further thought in the matter until an Administrator has been appointed and begins giving attention to details of organization.

RECOMMENDATION, That the Administrator be known as "Executive Secretary" of NAIRO, with priority of duties in his responsibility to the National Internship Program.

EXECUTIVE DUTIES Attached is the general outline of duties as defined by the Sub-Committee for each of the administrative responsibilities. The Sub-Committee presents the list as RECOMMENDATION, That the attached list be received by the Board, as criteria by which to determine the selection of an administrator, and by which to give specific assignments and responsibilities to the person so selected.

NAIRO HEADQUARTERS With respect to the location of NAIRO headquarters the Board voted to defer until after the selection of the Executive Secretary the question of location of NAIRO headquarters, with the decision to be made by the Executive Secretary in consultation with the executive committee of the Board.

CANDIDATES The Committee approached the subject of candidates from the first position of salary available. After discussion, it was the Sub-Committee's RECOMMENDATION, That the Board adopt and budget a salary of $12,000 per annun. It is recommended that NAIRO's personnel policy include favorable consideration of fringe benefits.

RECOMMENDATION, That the Personnel Committee be empowered to process applicants, to make recommendations, and to report to the Executive Committee, which shall make the selection, subject to approval by the Board.

A three member Personnel Committee was created, composed of Harold Lett, Chairman, Arnold Aronson, and Charles Livermore.
The Executive Committee shall be composed of the six officers and three members at large, elected from the board. These were: Herman Long, Marshall Bragdon, and Alex Miller.

Dear Board Member:

As suggested in the January 10th communication from Arnold Aronson, the attached report of meetings of the NAIRO Membership Committee held during the Kansas City Conference include four recommendations which require action of the NAIRO Board. They are as follows:

1. That the By-laws be changed to redefine "active" and "associate" members. exact wording was not suggested but the sense of the discussions points to something like the following:

   "...the Membership Committee recommended the By-laws define "active" members as those who are primarily engaged in intergroup relations in a professional staff capacity and that "associate" members be defined as those who are committee or board members of any agency or commission or any person subscribing to the basic objectives of NAIRO.

   "It was suggested dues might be different for the two different groups, possibly $15 for active and $10 for associate members. No specific recommendation was made, however, since time did not allow for full discussion of this subject."

2. That By-laws be changed in relation to regional representation by substituting "eight" instead of "four" in Article VIII, Item 1.

3. That permission be granted to President or Membership Committee Chairman to name four "Regional Representatives", in addition to the four Regional Chairmen appointed by the President, to serve on an interim basis until By-law change and that they be invited to attend Board meetings.

4. That a sum of $100 to budgeted for each Regional Chairman and Representative for travel and communication in setting up local groups.

Sincerely,

NAIRO MEMBERSHIP COMMITTEE
REPORT OF MEETINGS - NOVEMBER 21-22, 1957
KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI

PRESENT: Thelma W. Babbitt, Philadelphia (Chairman); Louise Blackham, Seattle; Virgil Border, St. Louis; John Bugge, Los Angeles (Regional Chairman); Eleanor Dungan, Chicago; Louis Ervin, Minneapolis; Frank Fager, Toledo; Burton Gordin, Philadelphia (Regional Chairman); Garnet Guild, Des Moines; Nathaniel Jones, Youngstown, Ohio; Sidney Lawrence, Kansas City (Regional Chairman); Samuel Simmons, Detroit.

Guests: Nat Griswold, Little Rock; Henry Harper, Peoria, Ill.; Wade Mackie, Baton Rouge; Jessamine Merrill, Trenton, N. J.; Hugh Austin Savage, Singapore, China; Hans Spiegel, Springfield, Mass.

It was most encouraging to find such a sizeable number of NAIRO Membership Committee members present at the conference. Some measure of their interest and concern in the work of our Committee is the fact they were willing to attend meetings two mornings in a row at 8:00 and 8:30 A.M.! The Chairman would like to take this opportunity to publicly thank these friends for their interest and enthusiasm, as well as for their thoughtful consideration of the various questions on our agenda.

It was also extremely helpful to have present the above named guests who, though not formally members of the NAIRO Membership Committee, were nevertheless willing to meet with us and contributed significantly to our deliberations.

REGIONAL REPORTS

Note: At the NAIRO Board meeting in January 1957 encouragement was given to the development of local NAIRO groups. An Ad Hoc Committee submitted recommendations for this activity and the Chairman of the Membership Committee was asked to promote such local groups through the Regional Chairman. A budget of $100 for the use of each Regional Chairman was set up. The following is a report of activity this year.

Western Region - The Western Regional Chairman reported plans for a conference on the West Coast, probably San Francisco, shortly after the first of January. If this seems to be successful, there is a possibility of having a regional far western conference later which would include intergroup relations workers from a wider area of the West.

A report from Seattle showed a local group active - not primarily NAIRO-centered but a county group of eight intergroup relations agencies who meet regularly to look at problems, decide what needs to be done and who is to do what. This group also worked hard and successfully for civil rights legislation.

Northern Region - In the Chicago area two meetings have already been held to which were invited, in addition to NAIRO members in that area, a sizeable number of other intergroup relations workers. They now plan regular monthly meetings and will send copies of their programs to the Membership Committee Chairman for sharing with other regions. Attendance has been about 50.

Detroit is hoping to develop an active local group in that area this year. The hope was expressed that local groups could be developed in several other mid-western areas such as St. Louis, Minneapolis and Kansas City.

Eastern Region - The Philadelphia NAIRO group under a local chairman continues to meet regularly about four times a year. There are over 50 NAIRO members in the greater Philadelphia area. To this group is added quite a large number of non-members working in related fields who are invited to attend meetings. Two sub-committees have been active this year - one on Membership Standards and one on Professional Training.

The Sub-Committee on Membership Standards met several times and came up with a draft report to NAIRO Board on the general subject of membership criteria. A copy of this report, sent to the Chairman of NAIRO's Professional Standards Committee, proved helpful by reflecting the thinking of this local group. Copies were also shared with the Membership Committee and helped shape their recommendations to the Board on active and associate members.

The Philadelphia NAIRO Professional Training Sub-Committee has been meeting regularly to plan a seminar for intergroup relations workers this winter. This seminar will be conducted in cooperation with Martin Chworowsky, Director of the Greenfield Center for Human Relations, University of Pennsylvania, and his staff. It will consist of three weekly seminars beginning in mid-January (details may be had from the local NAIRO group).

Two open meetings were held in the spring at the University of Pennsylvania. One was with Otto Klineberg who spoke on "Recent Developments in Intergroup Relations". The other was on the "Philadelphia Elite" by Digby Baltzell, of the University of Pennsylvania. This fall a panel of speakers brought to local NAIRO members and others the inside story of the violence which occurred when a Negro family moved into Levittown in August, and an account of the steps taken by agencies and local groups.

Other Local Groups - Effort was made to develop local NAIRO groups in Pittsburgh, Washington and Boston. No meetings have been held as yet, but it is hoped this effort will be continued and these groups formed this year. It was also hoped an active NAIRO group might develop in the New York City area where there is a large concentration of NAIRO members.

No report was received from the Southern Region, but the group expressed the hope that there might be a special effort made this year to promote NAIRO membership and also to bring together those working in intergroup relations in that area. To this end further regional divisions are to be recommended and it is hoped this may result in more representation from this most important area of the country.

General Comments - It seemed obvious from these reports that there ought to be closer liaison between local groups in order to share ideas and information. Also important would be up to date reports on names and addresses of new members. Both these items probably ought to be the responsibility of the Membership Committee Chairman. The first would imply the need for each local group to be willing to send a copy of meeting announcements and program to the Membership Committee Chairman (in addition to Regional Chairmen). The second could be worked out by the NAIRO Executive Secretary sending the Membership Committee Chairman periodic reports of all new members' names and addresses. These could then be sent to the Regional Chairman in whose territory they belong. Reports of local group activity might also be channeled to the Executive Secretary for use in the monthly Newsletter and perhaps a periodic write-up for the Reporter.

TECHNIQUES FOR EXPANDING NAIRO MEMBERSHIP

The question was asked "Why expand membership?, Why do we want new members?". Perhaps the most important reason is to build and develop the profession of intergroup relations by bringing together workers in this field to constantly work toward higher standards. Of course, additionally, is the opportunity for exchange of ideas and techniques which comes from association with others who share the same goals and ideals.

We felt there is a need to more clearly define "active" and "associate" membership. Here we gave further thought to the need for continuing work toward defining the field and the worker. We considered both the report from the local Philadelphia group and that of the NAIRO Professional Standards Committee. However, until such time as such a statement is accepted, it seemed advisable to continue to use the present definition in the By-Laws, with some modification.

Although there was not sufficient time to consider the exact wording, the Membership Committee recommended the By-laws define "active" members as those who are primarily engaged in intergroup relations in a professional staff capacity and that "associate" members be defined as those who are committee or board members of any agency or commission or any person subscribing to the basic objectives of NAIRO. It was suggested that the dues might be different for the two different groups, possibly $15 for active and $10 for associate members. No specific recommendation was made, however, since time did not allow for full discussion of this subject.

NAIRO Pamphlet and Application Blank - Great need was again expressed for a pamphlet or brochure describing NAIRO and for an application blank which would define active and associate members. It was suggested the application might include space for references in order to help determine whether the individual was active or associate. The By-laws state that:

> Article IV, Item 2: "The Board of Directors shall have authority over admission to membership in NAIRO, but may delegate to the Membership Committee, or its Chairman, or the the Executive Secretary, the power to receive and act upon applications for active membership, provided that such delegatees shall, wherever feasible, consult with active NAIRO members in the area from which the application is received subject to review at the annual business meeting, the Board of Directors may suspend or remove from membership, after opportunity for hearings and fair notice thereof, any person whose conduct is deemed harmful to NAIRO."

Therefore, Regional Chairmen, local groups and individuals may stimulate and solicit membership applications which will then be acted upon by the Executive Secretary and/or the Executive Committee.

REVISED REGIONAL DIVISION OF NAIRO

This was the major subject on our agenda and received full consideration. The following regional division was agreed upon:

Northeastern Region

Maine
New Hampshire
Vermont
Massachusetts
Rhode Island
Connecticut
New York
New Jersey Pennsylvania

Middle South Region

Delaware
Maryland
Washington, D. C.
West Virginia
Virginia
Kentucky Tennessee

North Central Region

Iowa
Missouri
Kansas
Nebraska
North Dakota
South Dakota

South Central Region

Texas
Oklahoma
Arkansas
Louisiana

Northwestern Region

Washington
Oregon
Idaho
Montana Wyoming

Southeastern Region

North Carolina
South Carolina Georgia
Florida
Alabama
Mississippi

Southwestern Region

California
Arizona
New Mexico
Colorado
Nevada
Utah

Great Lakes Region

Minnesota
Wisconsin
Illinois
Indiana
Ohio
Michigan

Since the By-laws do not define the exact geographic boundaries of the regions, there is no need for change in this respect. However, the By-laws do state:

Article VIII, Item 1: "...further the President shall appoint for Regional Chairmen of the Association from four separate geographic regions of the country, to serve for terms of one year or until their successors are chosen, and these persons shall also serve ex officio on the Board of Directors, if not already members of the Board."

The Membership Committee recommends that the By-laws be changed to read:

"...The President shall apoint eight Regional Chairmen of the Association from eight separate geographic regions of the country, to serve for terms of one year or until their successors are chosen, and these persons shall also serve ex officio on the Board of Directors, if not already members of the Board."

However, in order to enable us to function on an interim basis until the By-laws can be amended, this Committee recommended to the Board at its meeting on November 21, 1957 that permission be granted the Membership Committee Chairman to name four "Regional Representatives" in addition to the four Regional Chairmen who will be appointed by the President, to serve this year and that they be invited to attend Board meetings this year. The Board granted permission for four Regional Representatives to be named to serve on an interim basis and agreed they should be invited to attend Board meetings.

At its meeting on November 22, 1957 the NAIRO Membership Committee suggested the following eight names for both Regional Representatives and Regional Chairmen:

1. Northeastern - NAIRO President to chose Regional Chairman from New York who is free to travel and help develop local group.

2. Middle South - John Hope, Nashville, Tennessee

3. Southeastern - Father Albert S. Foley, Mobile, Alabama

4. Great Lakes - David McNamara, Grand Rapids, Michigan

5. North Central - Garnet Guild, Des Moines, Iowa

6. South Central - Wade Mackie, Baton Rouge, La.

7. Northwestern - Louise Blackham, Seattle, Washington

8. Southwestern - John Buggs, Los Angeles, Calif.

In determining the geographic division, this Committee used two major criteria:

1. Commonality of problems

2. Ease of transportation

In choosing candidates for Regional Representatives and Regional Chairmen, the Committee considered not only individual competence, but the ability of the person to travel. It was felt that Representatives and Chairmen should make visits to local areas occasionally in order to promote and develop local NAIRO groups. In this connection, it was recommended a budget of $100 be provided each Regional Representative and Chairman for travel and communication in setting up local groups.

NAIRO BOARD OF DIRECTORS MEETING
Chicago, Illinois
January 24-25, 1958

PRESENT: (Board) President Aronson, Allen, Babbitt, Coffey, Culberson, Fager, Garrity, Gray, Lawrence, Leskes, Marks, Whitby.

(Non-Board) Lloyd Davis, William Gremley, John Lassoe, Jr.

I. APPROVAL OF MINUTES

The minutes of the November 19-20 Board meeting were approved as submitted. (MOTION: Fager-Leskes)

II. REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE SECRETARY (John Lassoe, Jr.)

A. Membership: As of January 20, 451 members were carried on the roster, as follows: paid through 1958, 181; paid through 1957, 178; paid through 1956, 58; paid through 1955, 34. Since only members paid through 1957 or 1958 are considered to be in good standing, NAIRO's actual membership is currently 359. Urgent letters have been sent to the 92 delinquents, advising them that they will be dropped from membership unless dues are paid by February 28 (deadline for the compilation of the Membership Roster). After discussion, it was established that delinquent members may rejoin NAIRO without payment of back dues, although this is not to be encouraged until their memberships actually lapse.

B. Office Administration: Reviewing the office workload of the first six months, the Executive Secretary requested authorization to spend up to $30 monthly (excluding July & August) for necessary extra secretarial services. The Treasurer reported that this item, and one for vacation secretarial replacement, were included in the 1958 Budget under "Contractual Secretarial Services". The President noted the importance of continuing to farm out secretarial work to officers and members so that the NAIRO office would not be overwhelmed. Mr. Lawrence agreed to process the Board Minutes in his office, and Mr. Leskes volunteered the services of the American Jewish Committee in the publication of the NAIRO Membership Roster (mimeographed). These offers were accepted with appreciation. Mrs. Babbitt asked if Board minutes could be sent to the entire NAIRO membership, but it was later agreed that a summary of action in the NEWSLETTER would be sufficient.

C. Publications: The proposed DIRECTORY OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS AGENCIES WITH PAID STAFF is in preparation; questionnaires have been sent to all known agencies in the field (list compiled by Helen Amerman). (The directory will be prepared and published by NAIRO in cooperation with the Anti-Defamation League.)

A brochure describing NAIRO and its activities, requested at the September Board meeting, was delayed pending review of NAIRO's structure. Assuming completion of the review at this meeting, the brochure will be prepared immediately afterwards.

Promotion of the REPORTER has been hindered by lack of time and the difficulty in obtaining good mailing lists. Mr. Aronson suggested that Board members could help by including sample copies (available from NAIRO in quantity, without charge) in their respective agencies' mailings.

III. REPORT OF THE TREASURER (George Culberson)

The Treasurer presented his report for the year 1957, together with audited reports for 1956 and 1957 (James O. MacLean, CPA). He noted that receipts from REPORTER subscriptions, sale of publications, and Intern Trainee pledges were considerably below budget estimates, while membership dues receipts were almost as budgeted. The Treasurer's report (copy attached) was accepted with high commendation. (MOTION: Gray-Whitby)

The question of financial accounting to sponsoring foundations (i.e. Fund for the Republic and McGregor Fund) was raised. Separate books on the expenditure of foundation funds were ruled out, and Mr. Fager suggested that the report should be in terms of program accomplishment rather than dollar expenditures. The form and content of the report were referred to the Finance Committee for recommendations by the May Board meeting. (MOTION: Allen-Gray)

Convening as a Committee of the Whole, the Board considered the 1958 Budget proposed by Mr. Culberson. As an introduction, he stressed the fact that the bulk of NAIRO's current annual income ($25,000 from foundation grants) was assured for only 1½ more years and that it was vitally important that NAIRO now build a cash reserve and at the same time develop new sources of revenue. He noted that Internship Pledges from members and others could not be expected to reach the $5,000 goal suggested originally; accordingly, the 1958 pledge estimate had been dropped to $2,500, and a Special Funds Drive goal of $2,500 added. Anticipated receipts from membership dues and Reporter sales had been based on a substantial increase in both.

Anticipated expenditures had been based on the first six months' operation of the New York office and represented a reasonable target estimate for 1958. They included a $25,000 Bond for the Treasurer (cost: $35 annually), which had been recommended by the auditor and which was duly approved by the Board; promotion (travel) expenses for four regional chairmen and four regional representatives, which was later confirmed by the Board; and an allowance for the Executive's Hospitality Expenses (to be approved individually by one officer other than Treasurer), which the Board also approved.

Reconvening, the Board approved the Budget for 1958 as amended (copy attached). (MOTION: Allen-Gray)

At the Treasurer's request, the Board authorized a separate bank account for the Executive Secretary's severance pay reserve.

IV. REPORT OF THE SUB-COMMITTEE ON FINANCIAL DEVELOPMENT (Mr. Culberson)

Meeting in Kansas City, The Sub-Committee offered five specific financial recommendations, dealt with by the Board as follows:

A. "A renewed drive for pledges to help NAIRO fulfil its commitment to raise $5,000 of its total budget this year" - Noting the fact that income from pledges in 1957 totaled only $1,765, Mr. Culberson again recommended that the 1958 goad be reduced to $2,500. He suggested that the Finance Committee be given the responsibility for this item.

B. "A renewed drive for new members with a goal of a net gain of 100" - Mr. Culberson suggested that the drive for 100 new members (net) and for renewals (to reduce the number of defections among 1955 and 1956 delinquents) be the responsibility of the Membership Committee.

C. "A renewed drive to increase the number of subscriptions to the NAIRO Reporter"- Mr. Culberson recommended the appointment of an Ad Hoc Committee on REPORTER Promotion - with the responsibility for active solicitiation of new subscriptions and with the power to increase subscription rates at their discretion to $2.50 (bulk) and $3.50 (individual). This was approved by the Board.(MOTION:Culberson-Marks)

D. "A special effort by the Executive Secretary and the Board to secure foundation grants for administrative purposes, as well as for special projects" - this was left as a staff-Board responsibility, with the specific understanding that foundation grants received would not be considered as Special Funds Drive receipts.

E. "Authorization for the Board to conduct special fund-raising events in select cities " - Mr. Culberson translated this into the Special Funds Drive budget item of $2,500. He noted that it would not be very easy to raise even this small amount through special events but felt that the modest goal would be good experience for years ahead. This was referred to the Resources and Planning Committee, which was asked to develop ideas for appropriate events or efforts that might be undertaken by local NAIRO groups. The Committee was also asked to coordinate such activities and to decide which types were appropriate for NAIRO.

V. REPORT OF THE SUB-COMMITTEE ON PROGRAM DEVELOPMENT

The Sub-Committee, instructed at the September Board meeting to review NAIRO's Commission, Department and Committee structure, met in Kansas City and offered several recommendations, dealt with by the Board as follows:

A. "The concept and structure of the Departments are sound. NAIRO members should automatically become members of Departments in accordance with the type of agency they work for." It was agreed that the Departments would operate as before: automatic affiliation of each NAIRO member with a Department; representation of each Department on the Conference Program Committee, to coordinate planning of Departmental sessions; Departmental emphasis on exchange of information (developments, methods, techniques, etc.) relating to professional function within that type of agency. Mr. Lawrence offered a strong recommendation that each department be encouraged to institute (or re-institute) a Departmental Newsletter.

B. "In accordance with the concept of agency representation noted above, a Research Department is an anomaly. NAIRO members whose principal vocation or interest is research might properly be members of Departments in accordance with agencies they represent. However, consideration should be given to proper placement within the Department structure not only of researchers but of NAIRO members who are members of universities or who are academicians." -- Accepting this recommendation, the Board abolished the Research Services Department. (MOTION: Culberson-Marks)

C. "NAIRO Commissions should consist of members who share a common field of work, interest or responsibility. The Commissions should be a medium through which information, knowledge and insights are exchanged."

D. "Consideration whould be given to the establishment of an additional Commission to deal with the subject of interreligious relations." This recommendation, echoed by the Local Private and Local Public Departments, was endorsed by the Board, and the Commission on Interreligious Relations was created. (MOTION: Gray-Culberson) There was some dissatisfaction with the Commission's name, and the Executive Committee was asked to consider possible alternatives.

E. "The Commissions Should define their interests and mobilize their resources and insights around specific topics." (See below)

F. "The structure of NAIRO as amended in accordance with the suggestions offered is essentially sound. It has not operated as well as it might partly because of the problem of communication and geographical distance among members. Meaningful work by Departments, Commissions, and Committees can best be done by groups of members who can meet on a local level." (see below)

G. "NAIRO leadership should formulate three or four meaningful questions for the Departments and Commissions and have these questions considered throughout the year by groups of NAIRO members on the local level. These questions could then form the major areas of discussion at the annual NAIRO conferences." (see below)

The last three recommendations were embodied in a detailed plan for Commission reorganization submitted by the President (see attached, Appendix I). He defined as two major NAIRO problems the question of participation by members in NAIRO activities between Conferences and the question of geographical representation in NAIRO bodies. Noting that under the present structure the two conflict, he suggested that greater activity in local NAIRO groups would seem to provide the best solution and that the Commissions could be related program-wise to these local bodies. In similar vein, he suggested that the primary responsibility of regional chairmen should be to organize and stimulate these local groups. The President's proposal (Appendix I) was adopted.(MOTION: Gray-Marks)

H. "Consideration should be given to the establishment of a new Committee to deal with job security for NAIRO members." The Board referred the question of job security to the Committee on Professional Standards (which may create a special sub-committee).(MOTION: Gray-Marks)

The Sub-Committee's report was accepted. (MOTION: Coffey-Allen)

VI. REPORT OF THE MEMBERSHIP COMMITTEE (Mrs. Thelma Babbitt)

Discussion of the role and function of the Membership Committee and its relationship to RegionalChairmen and Regional Representations (see below) brought the following consensus:

The Membership Committee has primary responsibility for recommending and enforcing membership qualifications, for recruitment and maintenance of membership (i.e. new members and renewals, including re-enrollment of delinquents). This Committee shall work with and through the Regional Chairmen and Regional Representatives.

The Regional Chairmen and Regional Representatives are primarily responsible for organizing and stimulating local NAIRO groups, for aiding them in their programming, for coordinating their activities, and for reporting on them to the Board. As representatives of the NAIRO Board, they are also responsible for interpreting NAIRO policy in their respective regions. Finally, they are responsible for appointing people within their regions to handle membership recruitment and renewals in cooperation with the Membership Committee.

In approving this interpretation, the Board also recommended to the membership a change in the By-Laws increasing from four to eight the number of regional chairmen, this to be voted on at the 1958 Annual Business meeting. In the interim, the Board approved the eight regions as defined by the Membership Committee and authorized the President to appoint four Regional Representatives, to supplement the four Regional Chairmen already authorized by the By-Laws. Although the Regional Representatives cannot have Board status until the By-Laws are altered, they are otherwise to fillthe same role as Regional Chairmen in their respective regions. (MOTION: Fager-Whitby)

Discussion of the definition of local NAIRO groups brought the following clarifications: (1) they are not "chapters" or "branches" in the formal sense but simply gatherings of NAIRO members in given cities or areas; (2) Each group is open to, and automatically includes, all NAIRO members in its area; (3) No one can belong to a local NAIRO group except as a member of national NAIRO but local NAIRO groups may invite non-members to take part in their activities; and (4) existing (non-NAIRO) local organizations of professionals may not affiliate formally with NAIRO except insofar as their individual members become members of NAIRO and come together on that basis (I. e. NAIRO continues to be an association of individuals only).

VII. REPORT ON THE NAIRO INTERNSHIP PROGRAM (John Lassoe, Jr.)

The Executive Secretary reported on the first six months of the Internship Program, offering four generalizations based on his contact with all but two of the first year's interns: (1) the intern selection process worked well, and all of the interns seem to be both promising for the field and well-placed in their particular assignments; (2) most of the interns are getting experience and training that is transferable, and most are therefore in a position to move into other agencies in this field (a few do not fall in this category because the context and/or nature of their training experience is not what would commonly be considered "intergroup relations"). (3) the agency selection process could be improved; some of the agencies were ill-chosen for this particular program; and (4) most of the agencies and most of the interns seem satisfied with their participation in the program; a few agencies lament the fact that they cannot give the supervision they would like to, and a few interns feel that they do not have clear training assignments.

The mid-year Internship Seminar, originally scheduled for March 1-14, has been postponed until April or May to permit more careful planning and the recruitment of an outstanding Workshop Leader. The Educational and Professional Training Committee, in addition, recommended that a limited number of non-interns be permitted to register for the two-week workshop on a fee basis. This was seen by the Committee as a tentative exploration of a possible future NAIRO activity: training seminars for junior professional staff. It also suggested a partial means of support for the seminars after the major foundation grants have expired. The Board agreed that a limited number of non-interns (6) should be permitted to enroll for the Seminar at a total cost of $150.00 ($250 minus $100 scholarship), covering tuition and room and board. Criteria for the selection of these non-interns was left to the Educational and Professional Training Committee.

In considering the selection process for next year's internships, the Committee felt that some criteria for agency selection might be prepared for use by participating foundations; accordingly, a 9-point document, "Criteria for Agency Selection, 1958-1959", was prepared - officially at the request of the Fund for the Republic. The Board approved this document and directed that it be circulated.

The Executive Secretary noted that eight interns would be seeking employment at the end of their year of training and asked permission to circulate information about available interns among potential employers. He was directed to prepare a resume of education, experience, and reference sources on each of the available interns and to distribute those sheets before the end of their respective internships.

VIII. NAIRO RESEARCH CONFERENCE

Dr. Don Hager reported, by letter, that he was currently developing the plans for NAIRO's third Research Conference. Although the Research Services Department has been abolished, it was agreed that Dr. Hager would be asked to develop a prospectus for early submission to foundations as part of a formal request for a grant to cover Conference costs.

IX. NAIRO SUMMER WORKSHOP PROPOSAL

The Board referred to the Resources and Planning Committee a proposal submitted by Dr. Martin Chworowsky, Albert Greenfield Human Relations Center, University of Pennsylvania, for cooperative sponsorship of a summer (1959) workshop for intergroup relations practitioners. The Committee was asked to draft a more detailed proposal - in consultation with Dr. Chworowsky - for consideration by the Board at an early meeting. (MOTION: Babbitt-Coffey)

X. NAIRO HOUSING STUDY

Mr. Aronson reported that the Housing Study material originally compiled by Dr. Helen Amerman had been re-written by George and Eunice Grier for The Special Research Advisory Committee (Edward Rutledge, chairman). This had then been submitted to the Commission on Race and Housing in fulfilment of NAIRO's commitment under the special grant. Copies are being reproduced by the Commission for distribution to the NAIRO Board and the Special Committee. It was suggested that this might be reproduced by NAIRO for distribution to the general membership, perhaps as part of the report of the Commission on Housing and Family Life. The Board reserved decision until copies had been reviewed. The President, in mail consultation with the Board, will then decide on possible publication and distribution.

XI. WASHINGTON, D. C. STUDY PROPOSAL

Mr. Aronson reported that the Special Committee (Frances Levenson, Herman Long, George Nesbitt) was attempting to secure foundation support for this project. The Study Proposal, as currently outlined, was reviewed, and some members suggested that NAIRO's role needed clarification. The Board also asked that the project budget be redrawn to insure that no less than 5% of any foundation grant accrue to NAIRO for administration costs. (MOTION: Culberson-Allen) With these stipulations, the action of the Special Committee in seeking foundation support was approved.

XII. REPORT OF PERSONNEL REGISTRY REVIEW COMMITTEE (Chester Gray)

Mr. Grayreported for the Committee (which had also included: Paul Klein, chairman, Maurice Moss, Irene Miller, Richard Marks). Recommendations: That the Registry be continued for both members and non-members - free to the former but with a nominal charge for the latter (perhaps as an "associate membership," since New York laws forbid fees of any kind for this type of service); that each registrant complete a standard form or face sheet, which would be reproduced in quantity; that registrants continue to receive notice - by mail - of all job openings; that agencies, upon payment of a fee (recommended: $5.00) - would be entitled to receive copies of all registrants' face sheets; that agencies - without payment of a fee - might examine these same face sheets in the NAIRO office; and that procedures be developed for regular clearance of the Registry file and for follow-up survey of the Registry's service to registrants.

The Board noted that only 4 of the 125 current registrants were members in good standing and decided to limit the Registry to NAIRO members. It decided against any fee device designed to circumvent the New York law and asked instead that non-members be encouraged to subscribe to the NAIRO Reporter, in which monthly listings of job openings will still be carried. Feeling that the work of reproducing registrant face sheets would be an excessive burden for the NAIRO office at this time, it voted against making these available - on a fee basis - to agencies. Reservations about employer access to the Registry files were also expressed. It was decided that, for the present, the Registry would confine its services to members only and that strengthening of the Registry would be postponed until more members made use of it.

XIII. APPOINTMENTS AND ELECTIONS

A. The following were unanimously elected to the Executive Committee (in addition to the officers): THELMA BABBITT, JOHN G. FEILD, JOHN HOPE, II.

B. Mrs. Thelma Babbitt was unanimously re-elected chairman of the Membership Committee. By Board consent, the choice of the members of this Committee was left to its chairman in consultation with the President of NAIRO.

C. LOUIS MASON (Commission on Human Relations, Pittsburgh) was unanimously elected chairman of the 1958 NAIRO Conference Committee. Members of the Pittsburgh Conference Planning Committee were then confirmed as members of the NAIRO Committee.

Noting that the delay until January in the appointment of the various chairmen hampered NAIRO's activity and wasted at least two months of the year, the Board recommended that hereafter the President-elect be prepared to name Committee, Commission and Department chairmen at the Boardmeeting immediately following the Annual Conference; that this post-Conference Board meeting be scheduled - in advance - as a full 1½-day session; and that it serve as the organizational meeting of the new Board, including on its agenda the preparation of the 1959 Budget and other key business matters. (MOTION: Babbitt-Lawrence)

D. In presenting his nominations for the various chairmanships, Mr. Aronson suggested thatconsideration be given now or later to two-year terms for Commission and Department chairmen, to give them greater opportunity to develop program and organize their units effectively.

Mr. Aronson also explained that he had reluctantly by-passed all current chairmen in making his 1958 appointments. Despite the excellent work that many of them had done, he felt that new faces should be introduced into leadership roles this year and that it was fairer to appoint a completely new slate than to single out a few for re-appointment. He added that, since none of the nominees had been approached in advance of the meeting, some might decline. All appointments are, therefore, tentative and confidential, pending acceptance.

The following Commission chairmen were nominated by the President and confirmed by the Board (geographic centers chosen in accordance with the Commission reorganization adopted earlier):

Nature, Scope & Theory (Detroit) - JOSEPH FAUMAN, Jewish Community Council

Manpower (Cleveland) - CHESTER GRAY

Housing (Philadelphia) - JOHN McDERMOTT, National Conference of Christians and Jews

Education (Chicago) - ANNABELE C. PRESCOTT, Chicago Public Schools

Interreligious Relations (New York) - ROY McCORKEL, National Conference of Christians and Jews

(Other Civil Rights) "Washington D.C.) - BENJAMIN SEGAL, Trade Union Program on Civil Liberties & Rights

It was decided that the 1957 Manpower Commission (Louis Mason, chairman) would remain in operation until publication of its report, scheduled for March 1. It was also decided that, in the event that a nominee could not accept the chairmanship, the President was authorized to choose a replacement in the same city.

The following Department chairmen were nominated by the President and confirmed by the Board:

Local Private - LLOYD DAVIS, Catholic Interracial Council, Chicago

Local Public - BURTON I. GORDIN, Commission on Human Relations, Philadelphia

State Public - JOHN BINKLEY, Colorado Anti-Discrimination Commission, Denver

National Private - ISAIAH TERMAN, American Jewish Committee New York (N.B. Mr. Terman decld)

Federal Services - BOOKER McGRAW, Housing & Home Finance Agency, Washington, D. C.

In nominating the NAIRO Committee chairmen, Mr. Aronson spelled out the assignment of each Committee for 1958.

Resources and Planning - Consisting of present officers and all past presidents, this Committee has the responsibility for exploring and recommending new program activities and new sources of income. Since the program and finance aspects are seen as inseparable (the one depending on the other), an earlier division of this Committee into two subcommittees has been abandoned. In 1958, this Committee has the special charge of developing and coordinating program activities that will implement the Special Funds Drive for $2,500. Chairman: LOUIS RADELET, National Conference of Christians and Jews, New York City.

Professional Standards - This Committee is expected to continue and expand the discussion of professional standards initiated by its predecessors. Starting point in 1958 will be the report developed by the 1957 Committee for discussion at the Kansas City NAIRO Conference. The Committee also has the special charge of studying questions of job security for NAIRO members. Chairman: GRACE MARR, American Nurses Association, New York City.

Resolutions - This Committee is charged with the development of a draft statement of concern, to be submitted to the NAIRO membership in advance of the 1958 Conference where it will be discussed and acted upon. The statement of concern is seen as a more appropriate alternative to specific, topical Conference resolutions, it is hoped that its early submission to the membership will encourage its consideration by local NAIRO groups in advance of the annual meeting. Chairman: SAMUEL SPIEGLER, National Community Relations Advisory Council, New York City.

Interprofessional Relations - Drawing on the members of NAIRO who are also active in other professions and other professional bodies, ((law, nursing, education, etc.), this Committee will seek to develop closer liaison with allied disciplines and to promote appropriate joint projects or activities. Chairman: CHARLES LIVERMORE, New York State Commission Against Discrimination.

Publications - Formerly this Committee was nominally responsible for all NAIRO publications, including the Reporter. In 1958, its primary concern will be the proposed JOURNAL OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS (6 issues, published bi-monthly), which will be based on the respective reports of the six Commissions. Chairman (and overall JOURNAL editor): S. ANDHIL FINEBERG, American Jewish Committee, New York City. (N.B. Dr. Fineberg declined)

Educational and Professional Training - Reactivated last year to serve as the Advisory Committee for the NAIRO Internship Program, this Committee will continue with its present membership for the duration of that program. By design, it is equally balanced among academicians, practitioners from internship agencies, and practitioners from non-internship agencies. It continues to be responsible for advising the Executive Secretary in his administration and coordination of the interns' training. Chairman (replacing Charles Livermore, who continues on the Committee): Dr. MARTIN CHWOROWSKY, Albert Greenfield Human Relations Center, University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia.

Finance - Headed by the Treasurer, this Committee is responsible for the Annual Budget and for other matters relating to the administration of NAIRO finances. In 1958, it also assumes responsibility for securing and collecting both individual and agency pledges toward the NAIRO Internship Program. Chairman: GEORGE CULBERSON.

Conference Program - Continuing the practice inaugurated last year, this Committee is composed of representatives of each Department and Commission, together with such other members as the Chairman may appoint. It is responsible for planning the program of the 1958 Conference, subject to Board approval, and for securing the speakers. In 1958, its membership will be centered in the New York area. Chairman: IRVING GOLDABER, New York Commission on Intergroup Relations.

There was some discussion of the desirability of greater geographic representation in the chairmanships, especially in the South and Far West. Mr. Aronson noted that this year's appointments were at least a step in that direction and expressed the belief that the rotating city-centered Commission would, for example, locate eventually in almost every city in which there were even a few NAIRO members. The Board urged that this concern over wide geographic representation be borne in mind in future years and approved the appointment of all chairmen nominated. (MOTION: Whitby-Allen).

XIV. 1957 CONFERENCE: REPORT AND EVALUATION (Sidney Lawrence)

A. Finances: Despite the fact that approximately $925 was raised locally, the 1957 Conference incurred a $50 deficit. Mr. Lawrence indicated that this would be met locally but, as a matter of future policy, asked for a ruling on financial responsibility for the Annual Conference. The Board asked the Executive Committee to consider the question of whether NAIRO or the local sponsors should be financially responsible for the Annual Conference, and to report to the Board - with a policy recommendation - at the May meeting. (MOTION: Whitby-Culberson)

B. Mr. Lawrence presented a brief analysis of the Conference Evaluation sheets returned by some 41 member-delegates. The general sessions and the "opportunity for informal exchange" were rated as the best features of the Kansas City meeting; Commission and Department meetings were rated weakest. The general tone of the replies suggested that delegates felt crowded in time, and the Board went on record as favoring the extension of the Annual Conference to four days, i. e. Tuesday morning through Friday noon, followed by the Board meeting through Saturday. It was decided to poll the membership on this possibility, with an extension of the 1958 Conference (Pittsburgh) in mind if hotel reservations can be assured. The evaulation sheets contained various program suggestions, all of which were relayed to the Conference Program Committee. That body was instructed to report to the Board at its May meeting.

The Board expressed its grateful appreciation to Margaret Garrity and the President's Committee on Government Contracts for the hospitality extended at this meeting.

APPENDIX I
Minutes, Board Meeting
Chicago, Illinois: January 24, 25, 1958

RECOMMENDATION: REORGANIZATION OF NAIRO COMMISSION STRUCTURE AND FUNCTION

A. The Commissions, now six in number, shall be localized this year around six cities in which there are nuclei of professionals especially interested in the respective areas of concern.

MANPOWER UTILIZATION :	Cleveland	NATURE,SCOPE & THEORY:	Detroit
HOUSING AND FAMILY LIFE :	Philadelphia	EDUCATION :	Chicago
INTERRELIGIOUS RELATIONS:	New York	(Other Civil Rights*):	Washington, D.C.

*The Commission - formerly known as the Commission on Civil Rights - that deals with such topics as Transportation, Recreation, Public Accommodations, Voting, etc., needs a title that is more accurately descriptive of its special concerns.

B. The Commission members in the respective cities shall constitute the Steering Committee of each Commission; NAIRO members located outside the Commission cities will be invited to affiliate as correspondent-participants.

C. The city-centered Commission cores shall be responsible for:

(1) Their Commission report, for which they shall serve as editorial committee. They may, of course, solicit articles from others.

(2) Formulation of a major topic of particular interest in their Commission's area of concern - for discussion in local NAIRO groups around the country and perhaps at the NAIRO Conference.

D. The six annual Commission reports shall be staggered at bi-monthly intervals (beginning with Manpower Utilization in March) and shall be the basis for the (NAIRO) JOURNAL OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS. Overall editorship of the JOURNAL shall be in the hands of NAIRO's Publications Committee; editorial supervision of each issue will be exercised by the city-centered core of the Commission reporting.

E. Each Commission will be represented on the Conference Program Committee by a New York area representative selected by the Commission chairman (the Conference Program Committee will be centered in New York City this year). This representative will help plan the 1958 Conference and, in the discussion of Commission sessions, will reflect the concerns of his own Commission members.

F. Localizing of the Commissions in the six cities shall be for one year only. It is contemplated that the Commissions will rotate from year to year among cities in which there are nuclei of NAIRO members, eventually covering all.

NOTE: This recommendation was adopted - in essence - by the Board of Directors without dissent.

Meeting of

NAIRO MEMBERSHIP COMMITTEE
Philadelphia Group

September 22, 1958

The following have agreed to serve on a Philadelphia Committee to consider how membership in NAIRO can be extended to reach more individuals who are engaged in Intergroup Relations in all parts of the country:

Jessamine Merrill, Trenton Council on Human Relations
Robert Blackburn, National Conference of Christians and Jews
Charlotte Epstein, Greenfield Center on Human Relations
Iris Collazo, Puerto Rican Migration Division
Howard Heller, Citizens Council for City Planning
Robert Pendleton, International Institute
Burt Gordin, Philadelphia Human Relations Commission
Emily Kimball Young, Philadelphia Human Relations Commission (Interne)

The development of this group is in accordance with the agreement reached at the May 2, 1958 Board Meeting of NAIRO (see Minute V.)

MINUTES

Present at the first meeting of this group were: Jessamine Merrill, Howard Heller, Iris Collazo, Robert Pendleton and Thelma Babbitt.

I. We were united in feeling that Regional Chairman and Representatives should first survey and make a list of the personnel of all local and state public and private human relations agencies, as well as local branches of national agencies.

NOTE: We wondered what had become of the Directory of Intergroup Relations which was being prepared by NAIRO.

II. National NAIRO should furnish each Regional Chairman and Representative with a list of members in his region. Each member should then be encouraged by Regional Chairmen to contact individuals in his area on a personal basis, explaining NAIRO and what membership can mean to an intergroup relations worker. Also emphasize NAIRO's need for his participation so the field may be enriched and developed from as wide a representation as possible.

It was suggested that a memo be sent to each NAIRO member stressing his obligation to build up the field of Intergroup Relations. Among the advantages of membership in NAIRO, we jotted down the following:

1. NAIRO Reporter, Newsletters, etc.
2. NAIRO Journals
3. Personnel Registry
4. Interneship Program
5. Opportunity for fellowship with others specializing in Intergroup Relations in many different agencies and with different minority groups.

In regions where there are few or no members this contact should be by the Regional Chairman as much as possible--by using the travel allowance available and/or by mail.

III. Emphasis was placed upon the need for NAIRO members to become acquainted with the local leadership of less known minority groups such as Puerto Ricans, Mexicans, American Indians and Orientals. Distinction was made between the fraternal or purely social organizations of ethnic, cultural and racial groups (e.g. the Polish American Club, Sons of Italy, etc.) and those set up to improve the lot of their own groups. NAIRO would not consider the fraternal groups to be suitable for membership but would the latter.

IV. The growing number of church-community relations staff in many denominations was seen as a source of potential NAIRO members.

It was also noted that many YMCA and YWCA branches have community relations workers. Also volunteers and Board members in all of these groups might be potential associate members.

NOTE: Could the National NAIRO office get a list of names and addresses of these people from the National Council of Churches and from the national offices of other groups mentioned?

V. The FHA, VA, Urban Renewal, Redevelopment and City Planning Groups are likely to have community relations workers and they should be encouraged to join NAIRO.

In fact, it was brought out that, really, decisions affecting intergroup relations are being made all the time by governmental agencies and intergroup relations workers are expected to deal with the problems created by these decisions.

VI. In some parts of the country local volunteer human relations groups are being formed. These people need the help and guidance of professional intergroup relations workers.

NOTE: This brought up a discussion as to whether National NAIRO could undertake a Consultant Service for such local volunteer groups. We would like to discuss this more and present it to the full Membership Committee at the Conference. This could perhaps be another service rendered to members

NOTE: We wondered whether there should not be more of an effort made by NAIRO to speak out on basic issues related to intergroup relations, thereby becoming better known throughout the country.

A next meeting will be scheduled for early October and at least one more before the Pittsburgh Conference.

Note to Regional Chairmen and Representatives

It would be so helpful to us if you could give us your reactions to the above material as soon as possible so we will have the benefit of your thinking as we go forward with plans for a meeting of the whole Membership Committee at the Conference. Please send us additional suggestions--both your own and those of your local groups.

The Minutes of our September 22nd meeting were reviewed and copies of a letter from John Lassoe commenting upon various items in the Minutes were shared with those present.

This group heard with interest that the Directory of Intergroup Relations Agencies is in process of being printed. This should be a helpful guide to members and Regional Chairmen in promoting NAIRO membership.

We also are grateful for John Lassoe's offer of assistance in assembling names of personnel in national organizations which devote some part of their work to Intergroup Relations, such as, the Y.M. and Y.W.C.A., Church groups, Federal Agencies, etc.

It was nice to know we had scooped the NAIRO Board on the idea of a Consultant Service to be provided by National NAIRO. This will be a subject for discussion by the Resources and Planning Committee in Pittsburgh at the Conference. (See below for comments)

I STUDENT MEMBERSHIP

This subject was discussed at length. We felt very strongly that a letter should be sent out by Regional Chairmen to the Sociology and Psychology Departments of many colleges and universities and to Social Work Schools in their areas, outlining the purpose and character of NAIRO, urging that students in these and related fields be informed about the existence of NAIRO and the advantages of membership.

On the latter point it was brought out that membership in NAIRO would help young people realize the scope of the field and encourage them to enter it.

We noted with satisfaction that the NAIRO Board will recommend to the Conference a "Student Membership" category. But there was very strong unanimous feeling that dues should be less than $5.00. It was felt $1.00 or $2.00 would be more suitable. The suggestion was made that National NAIRO should study costs and see what mailings could be made to students for this minimal fee. Probably the Reporter would be most important. Publications like the Journal and other special reports might be offered at an additional price.

This group recommends a fee of not more than $2.00 for student membership

II ACADEMIC MEMBERSHIP

NAIRO members from the academic group should have a special category and should not be classified as "local private agencies".

III PROPOSED CONSULTANT SERVICE

We realized the need for NAIRO to provide a paid Consultant Service but we also felt that ways should be found to provide some sort of minimal free Consultant Service for NAIRO members, especially in isolated areas and for local human relations groups who often have no budget and who may be called upon to deal with crises.

This group recommends the consideration of a free Consultant Service

IV FEDERAL AGENCIES

We reiterated our belief that intensive work should be done to enlarge NAIRO membership among the Federal Agencies. This becomes more imperative when one realizes the growing tendency of government agencies to be involved in Intergroup Relations work. Specific mention was made of the dire need for more emphasis on the Intergroup Relations aspects of FHA and Urban Renewal Programs.

Note: We felt National NAIRO might well make a concentrated effort to seek interviews with these agencies to emphasize this need and to get names of appropriate people.

V INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTES

There are 38 local branches of this organization which are affiliated with the American Federation of International Institutes. We should get names of Directors. There are also similar groups in Hawaii and Canada.

Note: Could National NAIRO provide these names to Regional Chairmen for follow-up?

VI INTERNATIONAL HOUSES

There are a number of these around the country. Some have Community Relations staff. Could we learn from New York where these are located? It was mentioned that often there is a Council for International Visitors connected with these International Houses and a need for developing a more active community relations program in connection with their work.

VII SETTLEMENT HOUSES

More and more, at least here in the Philadelphia area, Settlement Houses are playing an active role in developing block organizations to deal with problems of interracial and intercultural relations.

Note: Could National NAIRO secure information on this from the National Federation of Settlements?

VIII HEALTH AND WELFARE COUNCILS

Some possibility for NAIRO membership may well exist in these Councils since many have field workers engaged very directly in Intergroup Relations.

In the organizations mentioned under V, VI, VII, and VIII it is possible Associate Members would be produced in addition to some Active Members.

NOTE TO REGIONAL CHAIRMEN:

If it is possible to encourage discussion of some of these suggestions and ideas in your local groups, it would help us get a wider reaction from the total membership. Please let us have your ideas before the Conference.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS MEETING
OCTOBER 13, 1959
SAN JUAN, PUERTO RICO

MINUTES

Present: Margaret Garrity, presiding; Arnold Aronson, Louise Blackham, George Culberson, Louis Ervin, Frank Fager, John Feild, Chester Gray, Sidney Lawrence, Theodore Leskes, Frances Levenson, Wade Mackie, Jessamine Merrill, Abbott Rosen, Frederick Routh, H. Benjamin Sissel, Beulah Whitby, John Lassoe (staff)

Guests: Marshall Bragdon, George Schermer, Samuel Spiegler

I. The Board approved the Minutes of the June Board meeting. (Merrill-Fager)

II. George Culberson, chairman of the Publications Committee, presented the Committee's report and recommendations on the future JOURNAL OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS. (See Appendix). Discussion centered on the future role of NAIRO Commissions and, more specifically, on the disposition of the material prepared by the Manpower Utilization Commission.

Committee members stressed their belief that the new JOURNAL should not base its issues on material prepared by the Commissions. It was noted that the JOURNAL will include sections or departments covering trends and developments in various subject areas; these might be prepared by the Commissions as a regular feature. John Feild suggested that Commissions might continue to issue reports, in addition to the JOURNAL. Chester Gray urged that Commission reports - in some form - be retained as a function of the Commissions.

Chester Gray, Manpower Utilization Commission chairman, expressed his belief that the Manpower Utilization Commission goals would be served by the publication of its materials in report form - - mimeographed as an issue of the JOURNAL, along lines developed for other Commissions during the past eighteen months. Margaret Garrity suggested that letters be written to contributors, explaining the decision to publish their articles in mimeographed rather than printed form.

The Board voted to adopt the recommendations of the Publications Committee, to publish the Manpower Utilization report in the old mimeographed JOURNAL form, and to establish a permanent Editorial Board to oversee the new printed JOURNAL (Culberson-Routh)

III. Frederick Routh asked Board endorsement of a proposed By-Laws amendment that would make the post of Membership Chairman an appointive rather than elective office and would remove the qualification that the Membership Committee chairman must be a member of the Board before election. The Board voted to recommend this to the membership. (Aronson-Leslie s)

IV. The Executive Secretary, John Lassoe, reported on two other NAIRO publications now in preparation. The DIRECTORY OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS AGENCIES WITH PAID PROFESSIONAL PERSONNEL is now in galley proof and will be ready for distribution in November. Galley proof clips are now being mailed to all agencies for a final check on accuracy and completeness of the listings. The DIRECTORY will sell for $2.00 per copy, $1.50 in quantities of 10 or more; free copies will be given to the membership. The Board, by consensus, directed that free copies should not be given to the membership as planned, since this listing represents a working tool for which agencies should be willing to pay.

It was reported that the Executive Committee had approved the publication of the Washington Desegregation issue of the JOURNAL OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS in reprint form. The copy cost will be 35¢, and single copies will be sold for 75¢, 50¢ in quantities of 100 or more. A total of 5,000 have been ordered, and advance orders from Washington, D.C., agencies alone were reported as amounting to 3,500 copies.

V. Margaret Garrity expressed her appreciation to outgoing officers and directors, thanking them for their contributions of time and energy to NAIRO, for their faithful attendance at Board meetings, and for their cooperation with her during her tenure as President.

Respectfully submitted,

JESSAMINE MERRILL
Secretary

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS OFFICIALS

Journal of Intergroup Relations

Interim Editorial Board

Report to the Board of Directors

The Board of Directors at its meeting of June 5-6, 1959, approved recommendations submitted by the Publications Committee for the publication of the Journal of Intergroup Relations as a printed quarterly, for the engagement of an Editor at $2,000 a year, for creation of an Editorial Board which, together with the Editor, would have "final editorial control," and for such changes in the relationship of the Commissions to the Journal as proved necessary to effectuate the foregoing.

Subsequently, the President asked the Publications Committee to continue in being and to act as Editorial Board until superseded by successors duly appointed.

The relationship between the Editorial Board and the Commissions having been left in a somewhat ambiguous status, the Interim Editorial Board has been confronted with a dilemma, viz., how it is to reconcile its exercise of "final editorial control" over the content of the Journal with the simultaneous exercise by the Commissions of their responsibility for planning and arranging for the preparation of single-subject issues. The Board recognized that there would be a transitional period during which full control would pass from the Commissions to the Editorial Board. Experience already has shown, however, that the dual exercise of control by Commissions and Editorial Board creates serious obstacles to systematic planning and to the responsible discharge of the editorial function generally.

At the time of the Board action in June, it was contemplated that material for Journal publication would become available in the course of the summer and that would be feasible to publish Vol. 2, No. 1 as the first printed issue of the Journal in the fall, featuring articles prepared under the direction of the Manpower Commission.

The Interim Editorial Board has deemed it inadvisable to proceed to publication, however, for the following reasons:

> They believe it essential that, prior to publication, the purpose of the Journal be elaborated, a plan for the nature of the contents of the Journal be developed, criteria for evaluation of materials submitted for publication be developed, and articles proffered the Editor be examined in the light of such statement, plan, and criteria. They have not been able to conclude the formulation of such guides in time to make them known to the persons who have already - as of this date - completed the writing of articles for the Manpower Commission. They think it would be wholly unfair to those writers to hold their contributions subject to evaluation against criteria not yet formulated. Other considerations aside, the volume of material developed for the Commission would not be adequate for the Journal issue of the size contemplated.

It is, accordingly, recommended:

1. That publication of Volume 2, No. 1 of the Journal - the first printed issue - be deferred pending the development of plans, principles and criteria and the availability of a sufficient body of suitable articles.

It is contemplated that publication may be feasible in January 1960, by which time a series of articles currently being written under the aegis of the Commission on Housing and Family Life will be available.

2. That subsequent issues of Volume 2 be published as expeditiously as possible thereafter, looking toward adherence to a quarterly schedule.

3. That the general purpose of the Journal be to provide a medium for exchange of professional ideas and insights, relevant new knowledge, descriptions and evaluations of approaches and techniques, research findings, significant timely developments in related fields of experience, and other material of professional significance to the intergroup relations field. (A proposed "Prospectus" is attached to this report as an appendix.)

4. That the Editorial Board, with the Editor as its executive officer, have sole authority to determine the policies of the Journal to accept or reject manuscripts, and otherwise to conduct the editorial affairs of the Journal, subject to periodic review by the Board.

5. That the Board clarify the relationship of Commissions and other integral bodies of the Association to the Editorial Board.

   In this regard, it is suggested that the Commissions might make invaluable contributions to the Journal by assuming responsibility for reporting periodically on developments of significance within their respective areas of concern. It is contemplated that similar contributions might be made by Departments.

##################

The foregoing recommendations are advanced by the Interim Editorial Board in the firm conviction, after careful study and deliberations, that they constitute the soundest base on which to project a Journal of Intergroup Relations truly worthy of the Association.

Respectfully submitted,

GEORGE W. CULBERSON
Chairman

C O R R E C T I O N

As authorized by the membership at the Annual Business Meeting, NAIRO Legal Counsel Theodore Leskes has revised the language (but not the intent) of Section 8, Article XVIII, NAIRO By-Laws, to conform with the appropriate clauses of the Internal Revenue Code:

> "8. No local chapter shall engage in any activity which may be construed as carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting, to influence legislation; nor shall any local chapter participate in, or intervene in (including the publishing or distributing of statements), any political campaign on behalf of any candidate for public office; nor act in any manner contrary to the By-Laws or policies of the Association."

The above paragraph should be substituted for Section 8 as presently worded in the attached full copy of the Amendment.

Marshall Bragdon, chairman of the Resolutions Committee, presented the outline of a second draft of the proposed Statement of Concern. He reported that suggestions had been sought from members during the summer and that a first draft had been prepared for circulation to all a few weeks before the Conference. The second draft, to be distributed at the Conference proper, would be acted upon at the closing Business Meeting.

OCTOBER 14, 1959

Margaret Garrity presiding, the Annual Meeting reconvened with a quorum present. The Executive Secretary, John Lassoe, reported on the year's activities, paying special tribute to the various members who had carried the burden of NAIRO's program.

The Rev. H. Benjamin Sissel presented two By-Laws amendments for adoption by the membership, both having been circulated thirty days in advance of the meeting (as required by the By-Laws). The first sought to formalize the role and function of local NAIRO groups and was offered as "Article XVIII. Local NAIRO Chapters." (See Appendix for Article XVIII, as finally adopted).

The membership voted to consider the proposed amendment by sections (Frank Fager-K.C. Jones, Jr., CARRIED). It then voted to accept Sections 1 through 6 without change, subject to final approval of the total amendment (Paul Klein-Herman Long, CARRIED). Section 7 was also accepted (K.C. Jones, Jr. - Frank Fager, CARRIED).

There was considerable discussion of Section 8 before a substitute section drafted by George Culberson, Theodore Leskes, and Frederick Routh was finally accepted (Paul Klein - Jessamine Merrill, CARRIED). Intent of the substitute section was defined as the prohibition of political action, legislative activity, and endorsement of candidates, but there was consensus on an understanding that the language of Section 8 should not preclude specific local action on any matter on which the national organization had established general policy. It was suggested that the Executive Committee rule on borderline or questionable cases of local action.

Section 9 was adopted with the insertion of the words "after due process" following "... may be revoked." (Paul Klein - Maurice Fagan, CARRIED). The Board was instructed to outline the meaning of "due process" as used in Section 9 (S.A. Fineberg - Wade Mackie, CARRIED).

The amendment, as revised, was then adopted (Marshall Bragdon - Helen Amerman, CARRIED).

The amendment to Article IX, Section 1, paragraph (b), was then considered; the intent of the amendment was to make the post of Membership Chairman appointive rather than elective. The membership voted to adopt the amendment, adding that the Membership Chairman shall then become an ex officio member of the Board (Maurice Fagan - Virginia Coffey, CARRIED). (See Appendix II for text as finally approved).

George Culberson reported for the Resources and Planning Committee, outlining briefly the plans for a series of consultations and study programs on goals of intergroup relations for the decade ahead. The program, for which foundation support is sought, would lead up to the 1960 NAIRO Conference and would provide the theme and subject matter for that meeting. Accepted by consensus.

George Schermer, chairman of the Professional Standards Committee, reported on his group's attempts to arrive at a suitable draft of a proposal for a staffed project to define standards and procedures for accreditation of professional intergroup relations workers. Foundation support will be sought for this project, after approval by the NAIRO Board of Directors. Accepted by consensus.

Frances Cousens, chairman of the Membership Committee, reported that NAIRO membership stood at a new high of 556. The committee stressed the importance of local chapter activity, of increased recruitment among professionals in peripheral disciplines, of greater discussion of intergroup relations professional concerns, and of more NAIRO staff field trips as key factors in the strengthening of NAIRO and the building of a larger membership.

OCTOBER 15, 1959

Margaret Garrity presiding, the Annual Meeting reconvened with a quorum present. David Danzig reported on the work of a Special Interdepartmental Committee established by the Board to ascertain the program needs of local agencies and national agency resources available to meet them. A questionnaire had been sent to all local public, independent local private, and state public agencies, asking them to check specific program services, consultative help, materials, and other aids needed. Responses were still being received at Conference-time but the few in hand indicated a fairly consistent pattern. As soon as other responses have been received and processed, contact will be established with national agencies to enlist their help in making certain services available to these agencies.

William Cousins, reporting for Burton I. Gordin, treasurer, presented the financial report for the first nine months of 1959. (See Appendix III for statement of receipts and expenditures.)

Samuel Spiegler presided over the discussion and adoption of NAIRO's Statement of Concern for 1959.

The 1959 Annual Meeting adjourned at 12:15 p.m.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS MEETING
OCTOBER 16, 17, 1959
SAN JUAN, PUERTO RICO

MINUTES

Present: Frederick Routh, presiding; Helen Amerman, Arnold Aronson, John Binkley, Virginia Coffey, Frances Cousens, George Culberson, Lloyd Davis, Frank Fager, Margaret Garrity, Arthur Johnson, Sidney Lawrence, Theodore Leskes, Joseph Monserrat, John Morsell, Edward Rutledge, John Yoshino, John Lassoe, (staff).

Guests: Marshall Bragdon, William Coffey, Eleanor Dungan, George Grier, K.C. Jones, Jr., Paul Klein, Howard McKinney, Wade Mackie, Alexander Miller, Thomas Peloso, Abbott Rosen.

I. The Board discussed the report of the Special Interdepartmental Committee, delivered at the Annual Business Meeting by David Danzig, chairman. The President indicated his intention to ask the Committee and Mr. Danzig to continue their survey, and asked for additional directives. It was suggested that the Committee's questionnaire be mailed to all NAIRO members, in addition to agency executives already contacted. A serious effort should be made to secure replies from all agencies, indicating a specific deadline for questionnaire return.

II. Frances Cousens, chairman of the Membership Committee, amplified her earlier report, delivered at the Annual Business Meeting. She noted that membership had continued to grow during the Conference and expressed the hope that this trend would continue during the year ahead. The President, acting under the new By-Laws amendment, indicated his intention to re-appoint Mrs. Cousens as chairman; she thus becomes an ex officio member of the Board.

III. The Board considered the report of the Professional Standards Committee, delivered at the Annual Business Meeting by George Schermer, chairman. The President indicated his intention to re-appoint Mr. Schermer, and the Board directed the Committee to continue its efforts to obtain foundation support for the accreditation project. Mr. Culberson asked that any foundation proposal developed by a NAIRO Committee be circulated among Board members for their information. The Executive Committee was authorized to give final clearance to the proposal developed by the Professional Standards Committee.

Mr. Routh indicated his general belief in the principle of two-year terms for committee chairmen and his intention to re-appoint most of those now finishing their first year of chairmanship.

IV. The Executive Secretary reported on the National Internship Program, now beginning its third year. Although precise evaluative tools have not yet been developed, a major task during the year ahead, some evaluation of interns and internships can be made informally: thirty-one interns have completed training during the first two years, and twenty-nine can be judged to have participated satisfactorily. Most of these remained in the field, although some have returned to school and some have married and left work. It appears now that at least seven and perhaps nine or ten interns will comprise the third-year "class;" it seems too that 1959-1960 interns will be grouped in three cities -- New York, Chicago, and St. Louis -- permitting new experimentation with more frequent regional seminars.

The Board directed the Educational and Professional Training Committee to concentrate this year on evaluation of the first three years of the Internship Program, and to prepare a recommendation for the Board on fourth year possibilities, including the whole question of the Program's continuation.

After considerable discussion, the Board voted -- without dissent -- to direct the Educational & Professional Training Committee to seek funds and the proper person for an internship in the NAIRO office itse.f (Johnson-Amerman, CARRIED). (Later rescinded). Discussing the problem of intern supervision when the Executive Secretary was in the field, Mr. Monserrat recommended that the intern be attached at those times to the staffs of various national agencies in New York City. Miss Amerman suggested that the intern be assigned, as part of his training, to various NAIRO departments, commissions, and committees. Mr. Routh observed that the intern in NAIRO must be somewhat more experienced than other agencies' interns; this internship would be designed for someone with local agency experience who sought to prepare himself for work at the national level. It was suggested that the internship would help NAIRO by providing additional staff help.

On the assumption that this internship, like most of the others, would require the matching of a foundation grant -- and that a total higher than $5,000 would be needed for such an internship, the Board authorized the expenditure of up to $3,500 to supplement a grant. (Culberson-Davis, CARRIED). (Later rescinded).

V. A proposed 1960 budget was presented by Mr. Leskes, as a member of the Finance Committee and in the absence of its chairman, and Mr. Culberson. It anticipated receipts totalling $29,300 and expenditures in the amount of $36,362 (originally $32,862, now increased by the $3,500 internship authorization), suggesting a deficit of $7,062.

It was agreed that the Special Funds Drive would be the responsibility of the Finance Committee and that membership promotion expenses of the Membership Committee would be charged against the President's Office.

There was considerable discussion of NAIRO staff needs, both professional and clerical, and of ways in which these might be met. Miss Garrity noted that, despite their efforts, NAIRO's present staff could not keep up with the present work demands. She indicated that the Executive Secretary had become bogged down with minutiae and that some way must be found to transfer administrative details to someone else. The relative merits of an internship versus employment of a junior staff person were analyzed, the Executive Secretary raising the problems of supervision and well-rounded training presented by an internship.

Reconvening on Saturday morning, the Board heard Mr. Culberson's analysis of staff and budget: He suggested that the National Office faced two major problems: (1) work once done on a voluntary basis by NAIRO officers and committee chairmen was being shifted increasingly to the New York office, (2) the Executive Secretary's field trips, of which there should be more rather than less, prevented prompt attention to requests and other work arising in his absence. It would be possible to hire one additional professional worker and one clerical worker now if the Board was prepared to dip into NAIRO's surplus or "cushion." However, the plan for consultations now being considered by the Resources and Planning Committee called for additional staff, as part of the total project budget, and this might involve an intern. He recommended that the whole question of extra staff be referred to the Resources and Planning Committee for study.

The Executive Secretary recommended: (a) that the decision of extra clerical help be deferred until he and the Office Secretary could prepare and present specific work analyses and suggested solutions, (b) that the question of professional staff be referred to the Resources and Planning Committee, as suggested by Mr. Culberson, (c) that consideration be given to the employment at an early date of an administrative assistant with professional potential, and (d) that the question of an internship in NAIRO be referred to the Educational and Professional Training Committee. The Executive Secretary and Mr. Aronson expressed considerable doubt about the appropriateness and feasibility of an intern in the NAIRO office.

The Board voted to adopt the budget as originally presented (removing the internship appropriation voted earlier), to refer questions of additional staff to the Resources and Planning Committee, and to refer the internship possibility to the Educational and Professional Training Committee. Both committees were directed to report back to the Board in January. (Aronson-Fager, CARRIED) (1960 Budget, as adopted, attached as Appendix I)

Messrs. Aronson and Monserrat stressed the importance of having NAIRO officers and committee chairmen carry out work and duties too often shifted to the National Office. Mr. Fager (and Mr. Lawrence, by proxy) expressed the opinion that Board members should be utilized more frequently and with more specific responsibilities than in the past.

VI. Appointments and elections

To develop closer liaison with NAIRO bodies and to facilitate coordination of their work, the President asked Lloyd Davis, Vice-President, to head NAIRO departments and Joseph Monserrat, Vice-President, to head NAIRO Commissions.

To serve on the Executive Committee, in addition to the officers, the Board elected Margaret Garrity (nominated by Mr. Culberson), Frank Fager (nominated by Mr. Davis), and Frances Cousens (nominated by Miss Amerman). (Mr. Aronson was nominated by Mr. Leskes but declined.)

To serve on the Editorial Board of the JOURNAL OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS, The President announced the appointment of the following:

Theodore Leskes, chairman
Arnold Aronson
Oscar Cohen
John Hope, II
Marshall Bragdon

* Irving Goldaber
* Louis Radelet
* H. Harry Giles

* Ben Segal
Frederick Routh, ex officio

(* - Have not yet accepted)

Noting that the JOURNAL's Managing Editor, Samuel Spiegler, had already rendered considerable service well in advance of the publication of the first issue (scheduled for January, 1960), the Board authorized payment to him of $500 at once, the amount to be charged against unexpended funds originally allocated to the Reporter for 1959. (Culberson-Garrity, CARRIED). (NOTE: To clarify the intent of his motion, Mr. Culberson subsequently prepared the attached statement, Appendix II.)

To serve as Conference (Arrangements) Chairman, the Board elected Mrs. Virginia Coffey by acclamation.

To fill other NAIRO posts, the President appointed, and the Board confirmed, the following:

- Regional Chairman (* - Have not yet accepted)

Resources and Planning	-	George Culberson
Professional Standards	-	George Schermer
Resolutions	-	Joseph Robison
Finance	-	Burton I. Gordin
Nominating	-	Booker T. Mc Graw (Elected by membership)
Legal	-	Thehdore Leskes
Educational and Professional Training	-	Dan Dodson (*)

The President was authorized to select another chairman without further Board clearance should Dr. Dodson decline reappointment.

Interprofessional Relations	-	John Slawson (*)
Special Interdisciplinary Committee	-	Edward Olsen (*)

The Board, in establishing the Special Interdisciplinary Committee, approved the project outline submitted by Mr. Olsen. (Culberson-Cousens, CARRIED)

The Board discussed the distinction between the work of the regular Interprofessional Relations Committee and the new Special Interdisciplinary Committee, and the relationship of both to certain activities of the Research Services Commission.

The Interprofessional Relations Committee is charged with establishing liaison with other professional associations, leading to increased exchange and possible cooperation with counterparts of NAIRO in other professions.

The Special Interdisciplinary Committee (Edward Olsen, chairman) was directed to proceed with its pilot project in the Chicago area, bringing together members of various professions and disciplines to discuss the role of intergroup relations in each and the concerns of the intergroup relations profession shared by all. This project will focus on interdisciplinary or interprofessional exchange without reference to other professional associations and in one community only.

Within the scope of the Research Services Commission's work, Oscar Cohen was encouraged by the Board to continue his efforts to establish a working relationship between NAIRO on the one hand and SSP and SPSSI on the other. As reported by Frances Cousens (for George Grier), the latter two organizations are on record as being anxious to cooperate with intergroup relations practitioners in the research area, and Oscar Cohen will serve as liaison. Mrs. Cousens also reported that the Anti-Defamation League will provide NAIRO regularly with sufficient copies of the SSSP-SPSSI Joint Bulletin for distribution to the entire membership.

The need for intensive examination of our profession and its relationship to other disciplines, voiced by Frank Fager and Joseph Monserrat, was seen as being met -- at least in part -- through the consultations now being planned by the Resources and Planning Committee. This exploration would be in some ways an extension nationally of the project planned locally by the Special Interdisciplinary Committee; it will, however, be carried out independently by the Resources and Planning Committee.

Alexander Miller suggested the need for help from other disciplines in evaluating our profession's techniques, perhaps through one or more Conferences across professional lines. This was not viewed as falling necessarily within the scope of any of the existing interprofessional projects or committees.

Observer to the United Nations - Arnold Aronson
Special Interdepartmental Committee - David Danzig
Economic Security - Don Slaiman (*)
Temporary Committee on International Exchange - Frank Loescher (*)

The Board voted to accept a proposal submitted by the Conference Clinic on International Exchange Programs (See attached, Appendix III), calling for the establishment of a temporary committee. It was agreed that the work of the UN Observer was part of this program. (Rutledge-Garrity, CARRIED). In addition to Mr. Loescher, Miss Garrity and Messrs. Aronson, Monserrat, Gremley, and Rutledge were named to serve on the Committee.

- Commissions

Research Services - George Grier (Re-confirmed)
Education - H. Harry Giles (Re-confirmed)
Interreligious Relations - Louis Radelet (Re-confirmed)
Nature, Scope & Theory - Frederick B. Routh (Re-confirmed)
Civil Rights - Harold Fleming (suggested but not confirmed)
Manpower Utilization - John Hope, II (suggested but not confirmed)
Housing - Edward Rutledge (suggested but not confirmed)

Commission chairmen appointed prior to the San Juan Conference were re-confirmed by the Board but it was agreed to delay confirmation of new Commission chairmen until the Executive Committee could study the role and function of Commissions, reporting back with recommendations for future activity at the January Board meeting. The Executive Committee was also directed to study the role and function of the NAIRO Departments.

VII. The Board discussed implementation of the new By-Laws amendment authorizing charters for NAIRO Chapters. The Executive Committee was asked to establish standards for Chapter chartering and to submit these to the Board for approval at its January meeting. Applications for charters will then be solicited. The Board took notice of the request from Philadelphia NAIRO that it be granted the first charter as a NAIRO chapter; it was agreed that the Philadelphia application would be the first considered, once standards have been adopted by the Board.

VIII. It was agreed that the Board would hold its next meeting in Detroit on January dates to be determined after a poll of Board members. The Executive Committee will meet two days in advance of the Board, probably a Wednesday evening and Thursday preceding the customary Friday and Saturday Board meeting.

PAGINATION INCORRECT

IX. The Board adopted a resolution of thanks to the Governor of Puerto Rico and the Mayor of San Juan for their extraordinary hospitality; to the government of Puerto Rico, and especially the Department of Labor, the Bureau of Employment Security, and the Migration Division, for making the Conference possible; to Joseph Monserrat and Lloyd Davis for their dedicated service as chairmen of the Conference Arrangements and Conference Program Committees, respectively; and to all who served on Conference Committees or as Conference hosts and hostesses.

APPENDIX II

STATEMENT BY GEORGE CULBERSON

My intention in making the motion was to reimburse the Editor for services rendered between the final publication of the Reporter and the first edition of the printed Journal. In other words this would not be an advance or pre-payment for issue to come out in January or later. It would be payment of services rendered NAIRO prior to January 1, 1960 and have no connection with any specific publication.

The fact that we did not publish in the fourth quarter of 1959 required just as much editorial decision as if we had so published. The work that he has already done and will continue to do with the Editorial Board in setting up the standards and arranging the details of contracts, establishing relationships, conferring with those writing articles for Commission reports, etc. is a service for which we should pay. This was my point and I hope it was understood by those who voted to approve.

As a matter of fact, I would suggest that we pay the annual stipend in quarterly installments at stated times rather than tie the payments to publication dates of the Journal (which may be irregular). If this seems to pose any problems concerning whether or not we get out four issues in a calendar year, I think this could be worked out by written agreement with the Editor that this is what is required for an annual salary of $2,000. Maybe this latter proposal is an agenda item for a Board meeting but I think it helps clear up the intent of the motion.

APPENDIX III

The Clinic (How Can Our Present International Exchange Programs Be Improved or Better Utilized, and How Can NAIRO Be Related More Adequately to Them) recommended:

That the President and Board establish a temporary Committee for the purpose of exploring and defining the relationship of NAIRO and NAIRO members to the Government Exchange Program. This Committee would investigate the following factors or potentials:

1. The use of intergroup relations workers in exchange programs overseas in the same sense the government now sends other professional persons to other countries for specialized purposes.

2. The use of intergroup agencies in the Exchange Program itself here in the U.S., i.e. the increased use of such agencies as prime or secondary contacts to the end that overseas guests of the government will receive more accurate pictures of our intergroup relations problems.

3. The utilization of NAIRO members and resources to better equip our overseas governmental personnel to more effectively interpret our intergroup problems to the countries in which they are stationed.

Present: Frederick Routh, presiding; Virginia Coffey, Frances Cousens, George Culberson, Lloyd Davis, Frank Fager, John Feild, Margaret Garrity, Irving Goldaber, Burton Gordin, Arthur Johnson, Theodore Leskes, Paul Rilling, Beulah Whitby.

Others: Richard Marks, John Lassoe, Jr.

I. (Davis-Garrity) Minutes of the October 13, 16 & 17 Board meetings approved as written. CARRIED.

II. The Treasurer, Burton Gordin, presented a Statement of Receipts and Expenditures, January 1 - December 31, 1969 (attached). He noted that (a) under Special Funds Drive, a $250 pledge was outstanding; (b) under Balance on Hand, the separate account at the Quaker City Federal Savings and Loan Association ($968.10) was in fact the Executive Secretary's Severance Pay Reserve and not therefore a ready asset; and (c) actual expenditures exceeded budget estimates for printing, postage, and telephone, but were under budget estimates for the President's office, the Reporter, the Treasurer's Office, Publications, Promotion, and Internship Seminar.

(Fager-Leskes) Treasurer's Report for 1959 accepted. CARRIED.

The Treasurer explained that the 1959 audit might exceed the budget estimate since that figure had been set on the basis of the unusually low fee charged in 1957 and 1958 by a friend of the former Treasurer's.

(Culberson-Fager) 1959 audit authorized at whatever fee proves necessary. CARRIED.

The Treasurer presented the budget adopted at the October Board meeting, with the following comments: The budget does not reflect printing bills of approximately $4,500 (Civil Rights report - $2,100; Directory - $2,400) expected and authorized in 1959 but not yet presented. It does not reflect anticipated income from sale of the Civil Rights report -- an estimated $2,000. It includes a $10,000 foundation grant that is now at least questionable. It does not include expenses anticipated in the forthcoming NAIRO-AJC Consultation, for which expenditure of $2,500 had been authorized in 1959.

Mr. Leskes questioned the anticipated income ($3,000) from the JOURNAL; on the basis of present printing figures, this seemed too high.

The Executive Secretary asked approval of an increase in rent budgeted for 1960, to permit payment of the surcharge required by the Jewish Education

Committee for air conditioning. (Leskes-Cousens) Increase rent item to $1,356 to cover air conditioning cost. CARRIED.

III. Reporting for the Finance Committee (Messrs. Gordin, Culberson, Fager, Leskes, Routh), the Treasurer reviewed recommendations offered by him and discussed by the Committee:

(A) Seek a foundation grant ($5,000 annually for five years) to subsidize JOURNAL until it becomes self-supporting. Referred to Resources and Planning.

(B) Active promotion of JOURNAL subscriptions by a Promotion Subcommittee of the Editorial Board. The chairman, Theodore Leskes, was authorized to appoint such a committee, including Editorial Board members and others experienced in publication promotion.

(C) Fund-raising efforts - perhaps on a quota basis - by local NAIRO groups. Because Chapters are just now in the process of reorganizing, this recommendation was deferred until 1961.

(D) Continuation of the Treasurer's efforts to solicit contributions from agency Board members, especially those affiliated with former internship agencies. Approved.

(E) Increased efforts by Membership Committee to enlist the 800-900 professionals who do not belong to NAIRO. Mr. Routh urged efforts to recruit Board members as a means of educating them and of engendering greater sophistication vis-a-vis intergroup relations practice; others disagreed, suggesting that this was the task of the agency professionals (who should themselves belong to NAIRO). The President instructed the Membership Committee to study the entire question of membership of non-professionals in NAIRO and to bring in recommendations.

(F) Solicit financial bids from cities seeking to host NAIRO Conferences, i.e. a sum of money to be raised over and above amount necessary to cover actual costs. This was rejected as impractical due to the small size of NAIRO conferences. However, it was re-stated as a matter of policy that the Conference hosts are expected to assume responsibility for all Conference expenses, including publication and distribution of proceedings. A surplus is still desired, and this should be turned over to NAIRO by the local committee.

(Garrity-Culberson) Policy on Conference speakers re-stated: host city Conference Committee is obligated to pay expenses for one outside speaker only; it may, as in the past and on request of Conference Program Committee, assume the responsibility for paying expenses of additional outside speakers. CARRIED.

(G) Solicit allocations or contributions from national and local agencies, perhaps as subscriptions for services and publications. Mr. Culberson raised a question about agency financing of a professional association of individuals but saw subscriptions as an acceptable compromise. The Treasurer was given authority to appoint and call together a Financial Advisory Committee, based in New York, to work out a proposal on such service subscriptions.

(Coffey-Leskes) Approve Finance Committee report. CARRIED.

IV. Mr. Routh reported for the Executive Committee on its discussion of the role and function of NAIRO Commissions. Recognizing a need for a thorough review of the total NAIRO structure and the development of a plan for restructuring, and feeling that this should be a logical concomitant of the year's discussion of future goals and priorities, the Executive Committee recommended that the Resources and Planning Committee be charged with developing recommendations for structural changes within NAIRO. These recommendations should be based upon conclusions reached during the year's "Big Think" deliberations, and the R & P Committee should be asked to report back to the Board in September. (Johnson-Whitby) So moved. CARRIED.

In the interim, the Board agreed that Commissions should be active and involved in the year's program of study and discussion. The President named the following to vacant Commission chairmanships, the Board concurring in each instance:

* Other Civil Rights - HAROLD FLEMING, Southern Regional Council
* Manpower Utilization - JOHN HOPE, II, Fisk University
* Housing and Family Life - EDWARD RUTLEDGE, New York SCAD
* Interreligious Relations - The Rev. WILL CAMPBELL, National Council of Churches (First alternate: The Rev. H. BENJAMIN SISSEL)

V. Mr. Routh reported for the Executive Committee on the entire question of staff expansion. The Treasurer first outlined the financial outlook for 1960, eliminating for the moment any possibility of foundation grants:

ANTICIPATED INCOME AND KNOWN RESERVES

$19,300	(as budgeted, minus foundation grants)
2,000	(anticipated from sales of Civil Rights reprint)
$21,300	(corrected total income)
19,351	(cash reserve and current stock holdings)
$40,651

ANTICIPATED EXPENSES

$32,862	(as budgeted)
2,500	("Big Think" allocation, voted in 1959)
4,500	(printing bills, authorized in 1959 and now due)
$39,862

$789

With these figures in mind, and with the conviction that 1960 must be a year of increased NAIRO activity and program, the Executive Committee recommended the employment of an Associate Director (and related expenses of travel, secretarial help, etc.) as soon as a minimum of $15,000 can be raised outside the present budget, from sources other than those included in anticipated income. (Johnson-Culberson) So moved. CARRIED.

Reviewing other program expansion proposals, the Board authorized the President, Resources and Planning Committee, and Executive Secretary to develop and present to foundations proposals for (a) JOURNAL subsidization ($5,000 annually), (b) DIRECTORY and other publications to be printed ($2,500 annually), (c) Chapter organization and development ($2,500 annually), (d) an Informational Services program, with staff ($12,500 annually), and (e) a Research Coordination Services program, with staff ($12,500 annually). (Fager-Leskes) So moved. CARRIED.

VI. The Executive Secretary presented to the Board a special project proposal developed by members interested in domestic migration trends. It is suggested that NAIRO seek a large foundation grant (perhaps $100,000) to contract with the U.S. Bureau of the Census for several special "runs" of 1960 data collected for recent migrants (those who lived elsewhere five years ago) in Standard Metropolitan Areas with a population of over 250,000. These runs, not presently planned by the Census Bureau, would provide breakdowns on migrants for age, sex, race, national origin, income level, occupation, number of children, and other pertinent facts.

NAIRO would then undertake to contact appropriate agencies in each of the Standard Metropolitan Areas, offering them the data without charge in return for publication and distribution of the figures for their SMA. For this service, NAIRO would receive administrative funds from the total grant.

The Executive Committee recommended to the Board that a committee be established or designated by the President to explore the details of such a project and to develop a proposal for submission to a foundation. (Culberson-Gordin) So moved. CARRIED.

The President reported on a proposal submitted by Dr. Max Wolff, suggesting that NAIRO consider sponsorship, with foundation help, of an International Conference on Intergroup Relations Work. Considering this to be a matter for consideration and investigation by NAIRO's Temporary Committee on International Relations, the Executive Committee recommended to the Board that the proposal be referred to that body. (Gordin-Garrity) So moved. CARRIED. The President indicated that he would add Dr. Wolff and perhaps others to the Committee.

VII. Mrs. Coffey reported on plans for the 1960 Conference in Cincinnati (at the Netherland-Hilton Hotel, November 15-18). Arrangements and planning are being carried out by ten professionals and a number of lay leaders from seven local agencies (Mayor's Friendly Relations Committee, Jewish Community Relations Committee, Fellowship House, Urban League, NCCJ, American Jewish Committee, and NAACP). Chairmen have been appointed for most of the necessary subcommittees. A budget has been established, and a committee headed by Marshall Bragdon is now attempting to raise the necessary funds.

Approval was asked for possible choices for the Annual Banquet speaker, in order that the local committee might proceed to secure same. The Board indicated that the following would be acceptable: Associate Justice Potter Stewart, U.S. Supreme Court, Secretary Arthur Fleming, Health, Education and Welfare; Nelson Glueck, President, Hebrew Union College; Ira de A. Reid, Haverford College; Dr. Frank Graham, United Nations; Governor Michael di Salle; Charles Taft. The topic will be developed by the local committee, in the context of the theme: "Goals, Directions and Priorities in Intergroup Relations in the Decade Ahead."

(Garrity-Davis) Commend Virginia Coffey and other members of the local Committee for excellent planning steps already taken. CARRIED.

* * * *

The Executive Secretary read a letter from Helen Amerman reporting on plans for the 1961 Conference (San Francisco: Whitcomb Hotel, November 7-10). The conference center and 200 guest rooms have been reserved, and the Bay Area NAIRO group will begin planning arrangements at an early meeting. The Board thanked Miss Amerman and her fellow professionals in San Francisco for their efforts to date.

* * * *

The Board received with appreciation an invitation to hold the 1962 Conference in Washington, D. C. A letter from David Sawyer transmitted the official bid on behalf of the President of the Board of Commissioners, Robert E. McLaughlin, and the NAIRO members in the area. The Board agreed that other cities must be given an opportunity to extend invitations, and asked that regional chairmen and local NAIRO groups solicit such bids immediately, in order that a final decision on the 1962 site may be reached at the May Board meeting.

VIII. Mr. Feild and Mr. Culberson reported on plans for the January 20-22 Consultation on "Goals, Directions and Priorities in Intergroup Relations in the Decade Ahead," to be held in New York City during the Dedication Week ceremonies of the Institute for Human Relations (American Jewish Committee). Personnel, speakers, and topics were outlined.

Proceedings (papers, discussants' remarks, and summaries of general discussion) will be carried in the Spring issue of the JOURNAL. The Board expressed its hope that this might be published in March.

Chapters and regional conferences will be asked to discuss this material at meetings during the spring, submitting proceedings and conclusions to the National Office by August 1. This material will be duplicated and sent to participants in the second Consultation (Chicago: September 14, 15) by September 1st. Papers and proceedings emanating from the Second Consultation will be sent to the membership before the Annual Conference, for discussion at same. (Garrity-Coffey) So moved. CARRIED.

The Conference Program Committee was asked to devise a broad outline by May, assigning general topics to the Commissions and Departments at that time. These topics can be refined after the September Consultation. All Conference participants will have the material from both Consultations for advance study. (Garrity-Gordin) Approve selection of David Danzig as chairman of this Committee, empowering President to select an alternate if necessary. CARRIED.

IX. The President reported the following stipulations, interpretations and procedure for the chartering of NAIRO Chapters, recommended by the Executive Committee to the Board:

A. Stipulations: 1. Activity reports (By-Laws Article XVIII, Sec. 6) must be submitted 30 days in advance of the Annual Conference.

2. Officers shall be elected in the fall, prior to the Conference and in time for inclusion in the Activity report.

3. No awards or citations may be given by local Chapters without the permission of the national Board of Directors.

4. Pending development of national NAIRO policy and procedure on agency staff appointments and dismissals, no Chapter shall issue public statements regarding same.

Mrs. Whitby objected to a permanent rule along lines suggested in stipulation #4 and expressed the hope that this policy and procedure would be developed swiftly. Mr. Johnson expressed concern about NAIRO inactivity in this area and raised the specific issue of discrimination in agency employment practices.

(Leskes-Garrity) Approve stipulations. CARRIED, ONE ABSTENTION.

B. Interpretations: (1) Non-members of NAIRO may participate in a Chapter's activity but may not belong, vote or hold office.

(2) Vicinity (Article XVIII, Sec. 1 & 3) may be any geographic area, as determined by the Chapter's founding members and as approved by the Board.

(3) Associate and student members of NAIRO may participate fully as members of Chapters but may not vote or hold office.

(Garrity-Ciffey) Approve interpretations. CARRIED.

C. Procedure: (1) It shall be the duty of each Regional Chairman to interpret Chapter chartering requirements and application procedure to potential Chapters in his region, to forward Chapter charter applications to the Board for approval, to transmit Charters to approved Chapters after Board action, and to offer program help and suggestions after the Chapters have been established.

(2) Each application for a Charter, submitted to the Board through the Regional Chairman, shall contain the names of at least five (5) NAIRO members (who shall be considered Charter members of that Chapter) making the application, a definition of the exact geographic area to be covered by the Chapter, and a set of By-Laws compatible with the national By-Laws and acceptable to both the local members and the national Board.

(3) Applications shall be made on forms to be supplied by NAIRO.

(4) A member of national NAIRO shall automatically become a member of any local Chapter in his area; applicants for a Charter must indicate that all NAIRO members in the area have been notified of the formation of a Chapter.

Decision to require the names of five NAIRO members on the application, rather than ten as originally suggested by the Executive Committee, was made by motion (Rilling-Feild). CARRIED, 9-1.

(Johnson-Davis) Procedure approved, with changes. CARRIED.

X. The Executive Secretary reported on the national office, publications, projected travel plans, and work assistance offered by agencies.

NATIONAL OFFICE:

Part-time help has been necessary since October and must continue on a regular basis. A high-school student has been working 14 hours weekly, and this should be continued, at least until the next Board meeting. The Personnel Registry continues to be very active, with ten or more openings posted since October. Job counseling continues to occupy considerable time, with both personal interviews and correspondence. Memos have been drafted to help answer the most frequently asked questions, but there remains a major problem: a lack of openings for true beginners in this field. Most intergroup relations agency "starting" jobs require 1-2 years experience in this or related fields. The internship program is the only hope for these people, and yet internships have been cut to six this year, due to lack of foundation funds.

Mr. Culberson asked if we must expect to pay these young trainees. Can we not arrange unpaid field training within agencies, as part of the Internship Program and perhaps in conjunction with college or university courses. Credit would not be necessary if we could offer this unpaid field training as a more-or-less certain means of finding employment afterwards.

Mr. Feild stressed the importance of evaluating the Internship Program this year and of promoting the transfer of this training function to colleges and universities. He suggested that the Executive Secretary consult with academicians, encouraging them to establish training programs (incorporating agency field work) and passing along all that we have learned.

Mrs. Whitby urged closer cooperation with schools of social work, in an effort to introduce greater concern for intergroup relations into their programs (curriculum and field training). Mrs. Whitby and Mr. Culberson cited their cose liaison with social work schools in their communities.

PUBLICATIONS

The NAIRO Newsletter will be issued monthly this year. News warrants more frequent publication, and issues would be smaller and more readable.

1959 Conference Proceedings will be published by the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico office as soon as the transcribing of the final session from tapes can be completed. These will be distributed to all members.

Bulk sales of the reprint, "Civil Rights in the Nation's Capital: A Report on a Decade of Progress," have already netted $1,750 (total cost: $2,100, and 2,000 copies are still to be sold).

The suggestion of a new vote, by mail, on the question of giving or selling the DIRECTORY was inappropriate. The Executive Secretary was not empowered to re-open the issue, and the Board's decision stands: the DIRECTORY will not be given to members. As an agency tool and as a major source of income for NAIRO, the DIRECTORY must be purchased.

TRAVEL

The President will visit the West Coast (Denver, San Francisco, Los Angeles, and perhaps Seattle) during the spring, utilizing the Executive Secretary's travel budget for this purpose. The Executive Secretary will concentrate on visits to 14 cities, two for the first time, in the East, Midwest, and Middle South. Chapter formation and the "Big Think" program will be stressed on these trips.

AGENCY ASSISTANCE

Since the October Board meeting, NAIRO leadership and their agencies have taken over an increasing share of the burden of office work. All chairmen have conducted their own correspondence and other mailings; the American Jewish Committee contributed the mimeographing of the revised By-Laws; and the National Community Relations Advisory Council contributed the labor involved in a mailing to the membership about the new JOURNAL.

The Board commended the Executive Secretary for his activity, over and beyond the call of duty.

XI. Mrs. Cousens reported for the Membership Committee, noting a new high in membership (588) but warning that 82 members were in danger of suspension as two-year dues delinquents. The Executive Secretary estimated that half of these would renew without persuasion. Mrs. Cousens suggested that it was important to find out why members dropped out and that personal contact with the ex-members was best. For this reason, she had planned to approach all past leadership (Board members, committee chairmen, etc.) for help as local recruiters. The Membership Committee will be based in Detroit but will include people in other cities. The Board suggested special efforts to approach non-member professionals, and Mrs. Cousens promised a special mailing. The Board commended Mrs. Cousens for the time, energy and imagination that she has given to membership recruitment.

XII. The Board considered a proposal submitted by the Commission on Research Services (George Grier, chairman), suggesting an annual NAIRO award for the most significant piece of research published. An Awards Committee would review journals and research publications, but would not solicit entries. On a motion (Feild-Coffey), the Board voted to postpone, without rejecting, approval of the proposal.

XIII. Reporting on the NAIRO Departments, Mr. Davis indicated that chairmen had been named for all but Federal Services (Ross Clinchy having resigned that post recently); that he was in contact with all chairmen and had sent two memoranda to each since October; that he was trying to encourage salary and budget surveys similar to that conducted last year by the Local Public Department; and that he had met recently with at least one of the chairmen (Saal Lesser, National Private Department). The Board commended Mr. Davis for his active relationship to the Departments.

XIV. Regional reports were offered for three regions. Great Lakes - A regional conference is being planned, probably for June and probably in Toledo. Southeast - There are too few members to justify a regional meeting, although one might be held in conjunction with one of the quarterly Southern Inter-agency Council gatherings. Southwest - Activation of members in the San Francisco area, and the formation earlier of a Los Angeles NAIRO group, gives promise of regional activity at an early date.

XV. The Board discussed a proposed amendment to the By-Laws, offered by Dr. S. Andhil Fineberg, which would read as follows:

> "All officers of NAIRO may be elected to their respective offices for two successive terms of one year each. This Amendment is to become effective with the next election for the year 1960, it being understood that those Officers who served for one year preceding the 1960 elections shall be privileged to serve for one additional year only."

Dr. Fineberg wrote that he was offering this amendment because he favored two-year terms and felt that this amendment would encourage the election of officers for a second year.

In discussion, the Board indicated its belief that the present system of President-elect allowed for this continuity in at least one office; that nothing in the By-Laws prevented the re-election of officers for a second year; that the amendment would not affect appointive offices, where the need for continuity was just as great; and that the question of office rotation might properly be discussed during the year's consideration of future goals and directions. It declined to endorse or recommend the proposed By-Law. (Leskes-Goldaber, REJECTED, 10-1-1 abstention).

XVI. Mr. Leskes reported that the JOURNAL OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS (Vol. I, No. 1) had been published and was now being mailed. It consists of 96 pages, and has been printed in a quantity of 1,000. A promotional mailing went to the entire membership and will be followed by special mailings to select lists. Various agencies have offered or been asked to enclose promotional brochures in their general mailings.

(Leskes-Cousens) All NAIRO members in good standing shall receive the JOURNAL without charge, on a regular subscription basis. CARRIED.

(Culberson-Rilling) The single copy price of $1.75 is approved for the JOURNAL. CARRIED.

(Culberson-Leskes) Payment for services shall be made to the Editor of the JOURNAL on a quarterly basis ($500 per quarter), rather than on an issue basis. CARRIED.

(Cousens-Rilling) The Board commends Theodore Leskes, the Editorial Board and Samuel Spiegler, editor, for the splendid and hard work required to bring into being such an important NAIRO publication. CARRIED.

The Board voted to hold its next meeting in Cincinnati on May 20 & 21, and its fall meeting in Chicago on September 16 & 17. The September meeting will follow the September Consultation on goals and directions, scheduled for September 14 and 15.

The Board adjourned with an expression of thanks to the President and to the Michigan Fair Employment Practices Commission for hospitality provided during the meetings, and to the Detroit NAIRO and Mrs. Cousens for the social event held in the Board's honor.

Respectfully submitted,

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS OFFICIALS
ROOM 209, 426 WEST 58TH STREET, NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JU 6-0782

MINUTES

NAIRO BOARD OF DIRECTORS MEETING
CINCINNATI, OHIO: MAY 20-21, 1960

PRESENT: BOARD: Frederick Routh, presiding; Helen Amerman, Virginia Coffey, George Culberson, Louis Ervin, Frank Fager, Irving Goldaber, Theodore Leskes, Joseph Monserrat, John Morsell, Beulah Whitby, John Yoshino. OTHERS: Marshall Bragdon, Robert Coates, David Danzig, Joseph Hall, Arthur Hull, Robert Perlzweig, John Lassoe.

* (Culberson-Leskes) Minutes of the January meeting were approved.

* (Yoshino-Culberson) Report of the Conference Program Committee -- see attached -- was approved, and the Committee was instructed to select and invite Conference speakers.

(Leskes-Morsell) The Board endorsed the Committee's view that broad insight and an understanding of implications should be stressed as goals of this year's Conference, rather than more specific "how to" concerns.

* The Board reviewed and discussed the Treasurer's report and the report of the Finance Committee, distributed in advance of the meeting. A variety of immediate fund-raising possibilities were noted, then referred to the Resources and Planning Committee. George Culberson announced that it had been necessary to sell the first 100 shares of our stock to meet current operating expenses; the remaining 287 shares must be sold later this summer.

(Whitby-Leskes) The Executive Committee was authorized to act on any fund-raising recommendations or proposals developed by the Resources and Planning Committee at its June meeting(s).

(Monserrat-Whitby) The President was empowered to name a special committee to approach national agencies and labor unions for contributions. (Those then named were: David Danzig, George Schermer, John Morsell, John Feild, George Culberson, Joseph Monserrat, Alexander Miller, Boris Shishkin, Frederick Routh.)

(Culberson-Coffey) Recognizing the gravity of the financial crisis, as set forth by the Treasurer, the Board voted to consider possible closing of the national office and severance of national staff at its meeting on September 17-18th. The Executive Committee was asked to meet earlier to prepare a recommendation based on the Association's financial state at that time.

By consensus, the Board voted to table until September the project proposal, "Intergroup Relations and the Public Interest," distributed to the Board earlier. The same decision was reached with regard to several other proposals that would not bring immediate financial gain.

* "Big Think," NAIRO's year-long program emphasis on goals, directions and priorities for intergroup relations in the decade ahead, was then reviewed. The national consultation (New York City: January 20-22) had stimulated a Middle South Regional Conference (Washington, D.C., May 6), a Great Lakes Regional Conference (Toledo, June 11-12); local study groups in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, and Pittsburgh; and projected study groups -- scheduled after publication of the special issue of the JOURNAL -- in San Francisco, Los Angeles, and Seattle.

* Discussion followed on a tentative proposal from The Center for Programs in Government Administration, University College, The University of Chicago, which offered half-subsidy of a national consultation on "Big Think" topics in Chicago during September. NAIRO would be required to provide or raise matching funds, in the amount of $2,500.

(Morsell-Monserrat) The Board decided, in view of NAIRO's financial crisis, that such a commitment could be undertaken only with funds that would not be given to NAIRO under any other circumstances (i.e. funds that could not be obtained for general administration). Mention was made of a specific foundation that was oriented solely to Chicago concerns.

* The report of the Executive Secretary had been distributed in advance of the meeting; discussion of it focused on methods for promotion of publication sales.

* (Fager-Goldaber) The Board accepted a Nominating Committee recommendation that the mail ballot be employed in this year's election of officers, directors, and Nominating Committee.

* A report on membership showed a total of 616, a gain of 48 since March 1st. The following breakdowns were noted:

By Departments:	Local Public	133
	Local & State Private	212
	State Public	66
	National Private	104
	Federal Services	28
	Unaffiliated or Associate	73
By Regions:	Northeast	260
	Northwest	5
	Southeast	22
	Southwest	43
	North Central	33
	South Central	9
	Middle South	72
	Great Lakes	172

It was also reported that some 200 of the 616 owed 1960 membership dues.

(Culberson-Monserrat) The Board accepted the recommendation of the Executive Secretary and Membership Chairman that members who have not paid the current year's dues by July 1st of any year be dropped from the membership roll. The Executive Secretary was instructed to institute this policy in 1960, with some leniency and only after due notification to (a) the members and (b) their regional chairmen.

* (Whitby-Fager) The President was asked to direct a special appeal to all members, asking each to recruit one new member this spring. The letter will be followed by special regional and local drives.

* A report from Lloyd Davis, Vice-President for Departments, noted that Departmental newsletters had been published by Local Public (Howard McKinney) and State Public (Virginia Huebner), and that Federal Services had been reorganized under a new chairman (Philip Sadler, Public Housing Administration, Washington, D.C.). There was no report for Local Private or National Private.

* A report by Joseph Monserrat, Vice-President for Commissions, noted the following: Housing and Family Life (Edward Rutledge) will follow through on recommendations offered by NAIRO in connection with the work of the Commission on Race and Housing. Education (H.H. Giles) plans a study of "Community Conflicts Related to Religious Differences" and a survey of intergroup relations professional views on intergroup education. Other Civil Rights (Harold Fleming) will focus on the area of voting, including the problem of literacy tests and the Spanish-speaking citizen. Research Services (George Grier) will continue its survey of research needs as viewed by agency personnel, a study being conducted by Herbert Aurbach, Pittsburgh Commission on Human Relations. John Hope, II, has just accepted chairmanship of Manpower Utilization; The Rev. Will Campbell (National Council of Churches) has agreed to chair Interreligious Relations. Focus of Nature, Scope & Theory will continue to be the "Big Think" program.

* For the regions, Great Lakes (Beulah Whitby) reported its forthcoming conference in Toledo and chapters in formation in Detroit and Chicago. North Central (Louis Ervin) reported on attempts to follow through on regional interest in the Governors' Conference on Human Rights, and on formation of a Minneapolis-St. Paul chapter. Southwest (Helen Amerman) reported on interest developed by NAIRO's President in his tour of that region and of the Northwest (Louise Blackham). Middle South (John Yoshino) reported on its regional conference and on the continuing growth in NAIRO membership there. Northeast (Emanuel Muravchik) reported chapters in formation in New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, and Boston, and described a special "Big Think" study committee organized recently in New York City.

* The President discussed his two-week tour of the West Coast, which covered five cities (Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, Los Angeles, and Denver) and included 16 meetings. Expenses totaled just $500, charged against staff travel. There was consensus that this presidential precedent was worth following in future years.

* The Executive Secretary reported that the Educational and Professional Training Committee had been unable to meet prior to the Board meeting, but would meet shortly thereafter. Noting that third-year internships numbered only four (with two or three other professionals affiliated loosely on a voluntary basis) and that there were no major prospects for fourth-year grants, the Executive Secretary indicated that he would recommend to the Committee that the program be suspended after July 1st. He reported further that, given so few interns and the fact that NAIRO was not committed to hold an internship seminar this year, he would also recommend that this be canceled for 1960.

* Theodore Leskes reported for the Editorial Board of the JOURNAL. Subscriptions total 234, in addition to the 616 members who also receive the publication. Single copy sales of the first issue have amounted to 61 to date. These subscriptions and orders, together with mailings to members who subsequently dropped out and to old Reporter subscribers, exhausted the first printing of Vol. I, No. 1 (1,000 copies). Another 1,000 copies were printed at a cost of $400. Volume I, No. 2 (special "Big Think" issue) will be published in late May and will contain 144 pages. A contribution from the American Jewish Committee will permit the printing of 2,500 copies for special distribution over subscriptions. The JOURNAL will attempt to secure advertising and second-class mail privileges for the third issue and those following.

* (Fager-Monserrat) The Board voted to hold its September meeting in Philadelphia, unless the consultation originally scheduled for the same week in Chicago can be financed and held.

* Virginia Coffey reported for the Conference Arrangements Committee, describing local arrangements, hotel facilities, local agency cooperation, and efforts to raise the estimated $2,000 needed for Conference financing.

* (Coffey-Fager) The Board approved the selection of Dr. Charles Wesley, president of Central State College, as the Conference Banquet speaker.

* The Board commended Mrs. Coffey and her committee for their work. (Yoshino-Leskes)

* By consensus, the Board authorized Helen Amerman to explore further her idea of a Conference of City Planners and Redevelopers. The meeting, similar in nature to NAIRO's Police-Community Relations Conference, would focus on the intergroup relations aspect of city planning and redevelopment. Several types of sponsorship were considered: jointly by NAIRO, the National Association of Housing and Redevelopment Officials, and the American Society of Planning Officials; by foundations; by a university human relations center; by ACTION; or by the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

* Commenting on plans for NAIRO's 1961 Annual Conference in San Francisco, Miss Amerman voiced concern about the lack of cooperation from national agency personnel stationed in that area. This had become apparent during the planning of the President's recent West Coast tour, and she shared with the Board her anxiety that the situation might continue unchanged during the active months preceding the 1961 meeting. National Agency personnel at the Board meeting agreed to write to their West Coast associates, urging greater cooperation.

* The Board received and discussed a proposal submitted by Alma Scurlock (Commissioners' Council on Human Relations, Washington, D.C.), suggesting revision of the By-Laws to re-classify members in a total of four categories. Independently of the By-Laws revision, she also suggested that a new dues structure be instituted. This was referred to the Membership Committee with a request that the Committee submit recommendations in September. A suggestion from the Finance Committee that a sliding dues scale (based on salary levels) be at least considered was also referred to that body.

* (Yoshino-Ervin) The Editorial Board of the JOURNAL was asked to explore a proposal submitted by Roy Millenson (American Jewish Committee, Washington, D.C.). Mr. Millenson recommended that NAIRO investigate the possibility of establishing within the Library of Congress a special intergroup relations collection, comprising selected, non-copyrighted materials that would be recommended periodically by NAIRO.

* (Fager-Monserrat) The Board accepted the invitation tendered by Washington,

D.C., Professionals to NAIRO, to hold the 1962 Annual Conference in that city.

* (Whitby-Leskes) The Board gave tentative approval to acceptance of a 1963 bid from Cleveland professionals. The final decision will be reached at the November Board meeting, with representatives of the Cleveland group in attendance.

* A suggestion from Cleveland professionals that NAIRO institute a Conference registration fee for NAIRO members was tabled. It had been suggested that money raised from this source be place at the disposal of the Conference Program Committee, for its use in paying speakers' expenses or honoraria. This would free the program developers from restraints imposed by the local host city committee's fund-raising problems.

* Reviewing a report from Clarence Senior on population redistribution study plans developed by Dr. Dorothy S. Thomas, University of Pennsylvania, the Board noted that special runs of 1960 Census data concerning migrants would be made for 19 cities. It voted to ask Dr. Senior to discuss with Dr. Thomas the inclusion of additional cities suggested by NAIRO members.

* By consensus, the Board agreed to advise NAIRO members to press the Census Bureau for inclusion (as part of its 1960 P-E series) of special reports on various ethnic and racial groups. It has been suggested by Dr. Senior that pressure on the Bureau to economize might force cancellation of these.

* (Culberson-Monserrat) The Board accepted the application of Philadelphia members for Chapter status and granted them Charter #1. The Regional Chairman, Emanuel Muravchik, will notify them of this action.

* (Fager-Monserrat) Application from Chicago members for Chapter status was approved with the following qualification: that the Chapter By-Laws be amended to include, as Article XIII, Section 4, the following:

> "This Chapter shall not engage in any activity which may be construed as carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting, to influence legislation; nor shall this Chapter engage or intervene in any political campaign on behalf of any candidate for public office; nor shall it act in any manner contrary to the By-Laws or policies of NAIRO."

The Regional Chairman, Beulah Whitby, will notify the Chicago group of its new Chapter status.

* (Culberson-Yoshino) The Board voted that it could not consider applications for Charters unless submitted in writing according to requirements adopted by the Board in January. The Board looked forward to receiving such formal applications from New York City and Detroit members, perhaps by its September meeting, but ruled that it could not grant approval at this time.

Proposed New York City By-Laws were reviewed, and the Board noted that the prohibition against legislative activity was not written in the specific language required by the Board and that the Chapter's precise geographic area of operation was not defined. The Board further asked Regional Chairman Emanuel Muravchik to explore with Northern New Jersey members the possibility of forming a chapter there.

* By consensus, the Board agreed that it lacked authority and precedent for action on the complaint brought by NAIRO member William Karp, alleging violation of professional ethics in an interagency personnel situation that threatens his job tenure at the Bureau on Jewish Employment Problems, Chicago.

* (Fager-Monserrat) The Board voted to establish a special committee to survey and study the entire question of professional ethics and standards as they relate to professional status, reputation, livelihood, and job tenure. The committee will report to the Board with recommendations on areas in which NAIRO should take active interest, governing policy, and procedural steps. The committee was also asked to outline types of problems arising in this context, with recent examples.

  The President then named the following to constitute that Committee: John Morsell, chairman; Joseph Monserrat, Louis Radelet, Paul Klein, Irving Goldaber, and Theodore Leskes.

* The Board voted its official thanks to those involved in the planning of the meeting and local hospitality: Mrs. Virginia Coffey, the Cincinnati Gas and Electric Company, Mrs. Donald Spencer, and local intergroup relations professionals.

Respectfully submitted,

MINUTES

Present: Frederick B. Routh, presiding; Virginia Coffey; Frances Cousens; George Culberson; Lloyd Davis; Frank Fager; John Feild; Irving Goldaber; Burton Gordin; Arthur Johnson; Sidney Lawrence; Theodore Leskes; Joseph Monserrat; Emanuel Muravchik; Edward Rutledge; John Yoshino.
Guests: Robert Greene; Saal Lesser; Booker T. McGraw; George Schermer.

I. Minutes of the May 20-21 Board meeting were approved. (Cousens-Culberson; CARRIED)

II. The 1961 Conference Committee request for permission to sell advertising space in the printed Conference program was approved. (Fager-Leskes; CARRIED)

III. An invitation to affiliate with the National Conference on Social Welfare was referred to the Interprofessional Relations Committee, which was asked to recommend action to the Board at an early meeting (Fager-Gordin; CARRIED). A motion to decline the invitation and maintain NAIRO's policy of affiliating with no organization was defeated.

IV. The Board accepted with thanks the report of the Nominating Committee (Booker T. McGraw, chairman), taking special note of Committee recommendations that the nominating process be re-studied for future years, especially if the mail ballot is used.

V. Chapter charters were approved for the following:

Detroit (Coffey-Fager; CARRIED)
New York (Culberson-Fager; CARRIED)
Minnesota (Fager-Cousens; CARRIED)
Metropolitan Washington (Leskes-Gordin; CARRIED)

VI. The Board accepted with thanks (Leskes-Cousens; CARRIED) a report from the Publications Committee that showed the following: a gain over the summer of 181 non-member subscriptions to the JOURNAL, for a total of 415 (or 20% of stock) sold since publication; and the sale to date of 3,219 copies of Civil Rights in the Nation's Capital (or 80% of stock) since publication.

VII. The following action was taken on recommendations presented by the Membership Committee (Frances Cousens, chairman):

A. To establish a new category of Participating member (dues: $5), for those not professionally employed (Active) or agency Board members (Associate, under this proposed revision). REJECTED.

B. To establish anniversary renewal of memberships as NAIRO policy, retroactive to August (memberships to expire one year from date of joining, rather than at the end of the calendar year). (Culberson-Leskes; CARRIED)

C. To drop members who have not paid current dues by the midpoint (six months) of their membership year. (Late payment of dues is not to change membership anniversary date). (Fager-Leskes; CARRIED)

D. To establish a $2 reinstatement service charge, for those dropped members rejoining NAIRO within two years. (Cousens-Culberson; CARRIED)

E. To offer prizes for those recruiting the largest number of new members. REJECTED (Culberson-Fager)

F. To establish a "Sponsors of NAIRO" category for those contributing $25 or more annually. Referred to the Membership Committee for study of services and privileges that might be offered to sponsors; basic idea approved. (Johnson-Coffey; CARRIED)

H. To establish Life Memberships in NAIRO (Life Active and Life Associate) at a $300 fee, payable in one sum or in three annual installments. (Johnson-Leskes; CARRIED). A plaque will be installed in the NAIRO office, to carry the names of life members.

A Special Committee was authorized (chairman to be named by President), to develop a public relations program for the Association, reporting back to the Board with its recommendations. (Monserrat-Cousens; CARRIED)

The Membership Committee reported a total NAIRO membership of 615, all paid for the current year. Since May, 67 new members had been added, while, under the policy adopted at the previous Board meeting, 41 members had been dropped for non-payment of dues, with another 30 due to be dropped on October 1st.

VIII. A Conference registration fee of $5 for both members and non-members was approved, to begin this year. (Gordin-Leskes; CARRIED) The report of the Conference Committee (Virginia Coffey, chairman) was accepted with commendation of its members, as was the report of the Conference Program Committee (David Danzig, chairman). (Monserrat-Culberson; CARRIED)

IX. A Development Fund was established, with the understanding that money contributed by members for this purpose would be used for program expansion only, except in time of crisis. (Gordin-Cousens; CARRIED)

X. The report of the Treasurer was approved. Noting that, for the remainder of 1960, firmly anticipated income equalled anticipated expenditures (under an austerity budget), the Board voted to defer decision on the closing of the National Office until its November meeting. (Gordin-Feild; CARRIED)

XI. A suggestion that certain services be offered to agencies on a subscription fee basis was referred to the Resources and Planning Committee for further study. That committee was asked to survey agency desires and needs and to inquire into services offered by other professional associations. Development of a promotional brochure ("What Is NAIRO?") was approved, with the request that it be printed at the earliest possible moment. (Gordin-Davis; CARRIED)

XII. Considering a variety of suggested program proposals, the Board gave approval to a pilot project in the area of housing opportunity. To be developed in cooperation with the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing, it would concern itself with the training of personnel for housing programs, with the staffing of selected housing groups around the country, and with conferences for city planners and redevelopers. (Rutledge-Culberson; CARRIED)

The President appointed a committee to develop the housing project proposal, holding such consultations with housing experts as it deems necessary: Edward Rutledge, chairman; Frederick Routh; George Culberson; Frances Levenson; and Joseph Monserrat.

As part of the housing project, the Board also approved "The Changing Metropolis" as the theme of a (1961) year-long program of study and discussion for NAIRO Chapters, regional conferences, and other NAIRO units, culminating in the 1961 Annual Conference. Money would be sought for a consultation, similar to that held in January, 1960.

The Board approved the report of the Committee on International Relations, which included development of an international survey, an international conference, and an international center for intergroup relations, if funds can be obtained.

Tentative approval was given to a proposal that NAIRO inaugurate a program, combining elements of internship and in-service training, designed to prepare potential intergroup relations workers for municipal and state agency (and private organization) openings that will be occurring with increasing frequency in the South. The Executive Secretary was directed to develop such a program prospectus for Board approval at an early meeting. (Fager-Rutledge; CARRIED)

XIII. The Board adjourned, with thanks to the Philadelphia Commission on Human Relations for its hospitality.

Respectfully submitted,

16 September 1960

TO: NAIRO Board of Directors
FROM: John Lassoe, Jr., Executive Secretary
SUBJECT: Fund-raising efforts: Summer, 1960

At its May 20-21 meeting in Cincinnati, the Board directed that certain steps be taken to secure the funds necessary for NAIRO's survival. Many of these were discussed subsequently at meetings of the Resources and Planning Committee in Philadelphia (June 9) and Toledo (June 10). Some action has been taken on most of the directives, and a report follows:

Membership

The "Each One Get One" membership drive, launched in June, has recruited 62 new members. (June membership: 624)

Despite strenuous efforts to secure their renewals for 1960, it was finally necessary to drop 41 old members* on September 9th. (Original Board-directed deadline: July 1st)

NAIRO's present membership: 6 1 5, all paid for 1960.*

* Another 3 0 old members have yet to pay 1960 dues, but have indicated their intention to pay. They have not been dropped from the roster, but are not included in the paid membership figure.

JOURNAL Subscriptions

Special efforts to attract JOURNAL subscribers continued over the summer, and 1 8 1 new ones were secured.

Non-member subscriptions now total 4 1 5.

Publication sales

Single-copy and small-bulk sales of the DIRECTORY (147 sold since May) and the CIVIL RIGHTS report (64 sold since May) also continued.

Single-copy JOURNAL sales (89 since May) accounted for a modest return, as did sales of the special MANPOWER UTILIZATION Report.

16 September 1960

TO: NAIRO Board of Directors
FROM: John V.P. Lassoe, Jr., Executive Secretary
SUBJECT: Summary of Suggested Proposals, 1960

A large number of special projects and programs have been proposed to NAIRO or developed by its committees over the past two years. Summarized here are: (a) those already approved by the Board, (b) those now proposed by NAIRO committees or commissions, and (c) those suggested by individual members or by the executive secretary.

A. APPROVED

1. Associate Director ($15,000 annually for three years, covering salary and related expenses) - - Employment of staff to supplement work of the present executive, across the board or with specific program responsibility. (In writing; Board approval)

2. Informational Services Program ($13,000 annually for three years, covering salary and related expenses) -- Four-fold attention to field's information needs: survey of existing resources, referral of inquiries, research on non-referrable inquiries, preparation of special materials. (In writing; Board approval)

3. Journal of Intergroup Relations ($6,000 annually for three years, covering editorial, printing and promotion costs) - Subsidy of major costs of Journal publication during its first three years, i.e., until it becomes self-supporting. (In writing; Board approval)

4. Publications Fund ($2,500 annually for three years, covering editorial and printing costs) -- Establishment of a revolving fund to permit publication of pamphlets for low-cost distribution. (In writing; Board approbal)

5. Local Program Activity Aid ($1,500 annually for three years, covering travel, materials, etc.) -- Stimulation of regional NAIRO conferences and local NAIRO chapters through officer and staff travel, and other program aid. (In writing; Board approval)

6. Research services ($15,000 annually for three years, covering staff and related expenses) -- Continuing survey of pertinent agency and academic research, organization of practitioner-academician research conferences, preparation of research bulletins, stimulation of needed research. (Board approval; to be written).

7. Internship Program (No fixed amount or time period) -- Funds have been sought constantly since 1958 to provide matching grants ($2,500 each) for agency internships; administrative and seminar funds must now be sought, too. (In writing; Board approval)

8. International Survey ($15,000 for one year; preferably $30,000 for two years) -- Compilation of information and materials on intergroup relations problems and approaches throughout the world; preparation of summary document; development of agenda for international conference (see B, 3 below); rationale for international center (see B, 4 below). (In writing; Executive Committee approval)

9. "Big Think" Consultation ($2,500 to match funds offered by Center for Programs in Government Administration, University College, University of Chicago) -- A meeting similar to the January (New York City) consultation, to advance "Big Think" discussion in 1960. (In writing; Board approval). (See substitute suggestion, C, 1 below).

B. COMMITTEE PROPOSALS

1. "Intergroup Relations and the Public Interest" ($8,000 for one year, covering salary and related costs) - An inquiry into this subject, along lines developed by a midwest Philosophy body but with special reference to intergroup relations concerns. (Special Interdisciplinary Committee: Edward Olsen). (In writing; action deferred by Board at May meeting)

2. Housing Internship Program (Amount and time period not established) -- To train staff for intergroup relations housing programs, under the framework of the old internship program but with sole emphasis on housing. (Commission on Housing and Family Life) (To be explored and written) (See C,5 below for complementary suggestion)

3. International Conference (Amount and time period not established) -- A proposal for an international conference on intergroup relations work, involving practitioners and academicians from various parts of the world. This would follow the international survey (A, 8 above), which would provide both agenda and participant contacts for the meeting. (Committee on International Relations) (To be explored and written)

   It has been suggested that the Conference need not necessarily await completion of the survey, that the agenda and contacts abroad could be developed now with existing foreign and U.S. resources. (David Danzig)

4. International Center (Amount and time period not established) -- A proposal for an international center on intergroup relations research and practice, to compile and disseminate the latest information on intergroup relations work around the world. This proposal will be developed around survey results (A, 8 above). (Committee on International Relations) (To be explored and written)

5. Defining Professional Standards ($15,000 for one year, covering staff salary and related expenses) -- Definition of the role and function of the intergroup relations generalist and the standards for various professional attributes, leading to the creation of machinery for the accreditation of consultants. (Committee on Professional Standards) (In writing)

C. SUGGESTED

1. "Big Think, 1961" ($6 - 10,000 for one year, covering consultation(s) and special Journal issue) -- A year-long program of consultations and discussion designed to help the field translate its directions and visible trends

1. into short-range and long-range goals, with program priorities. The Chicago consultation (see A,1) would become a January meeting to launch the 1961 program.

2. (Perhaps as part of #1) Specialized Consultations ($4-5,000 apiece) -- A series of top-level consultations on specific areas of concern (e.g. housing, city planning, employment, guidance and counselling), involving intergroup relations workers and outside experts. Nature of discussion: "brainstorming." Focus: methods and techniques.

3. In-Service Training (Amount and time period not established) -- A series of in-service seminars or institutes in cities across the country, designed for "middlers" (3-7 years' experience) in intergroup relations and related agencies. (Advanced by Financial Advisory Committee; also suggested by others)

4. Center for Advanced Studies (Amount not established, but high) -- Establishment at some university of a center designed to give experienced professionals an opportunity for "mind-stretching" study, discussion and research. [The Interagency Executives Council, which first proposed the idea, contemplated a group of twenty-five each semester, all on paid leave-of-absence from their agencies or (for public agencies) on scholarships]

5. Housing Opportunity Program (Possibly $80,000 annually for three years; in cooperation with National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing) -- A pilot project concerned with training of staff and development of program in 6-8 housing opportunity groups around the country. The project would select presently unstaffed programs and would recruit, train and supervise staff for each -- utilizing seminars, field consultation, publications, etc. The local group would pay its own operating expenses, exclusive of staff salary. NCDH would provide technical and program guidance; NAIRO would supervise training. (Suggested by Frank Quinn; endorsed by Frances Levenson)

6. Agency Newsletter (possibly as part of Informational Services Program (see A,2) or as separate project with budget of $8-10,000 annually for three years) -- Compilation and dissemination of agency news, program ideas, structural changes, and developments. Similar to Departmental newsletters, but (a) staffed and (b) distributed across agency lines. (Suggested by Maurice Fagan and others)

7. Bulletin for Board Members (possibly as part of A,2 or as separate project with budget of $3-5,000 annually for three years) -- A bi-monthly or quarterly newsletter for agency Board members (those belonging to NAIRO or those subscribing or both), to report agency and professional (but not substantive) news of special interest; to help develop profession's image; to give Board members a sense of nationwise "fraternity." (Harold Murray has suggested that such a bulletin be developed for all interested lay people -- "Friends of NAIRO" -- who express an interest in intergroup relations work.)

8. Consultant Services ($50,000 annually for three years, covering staff salary, consultant fees, travel, materials, etc.) -- A project to render professional assistance to new citizens groups and public agencies, especially in the South, that face organizational problems. Competent professionals (employed on a fee basis) would be made available to new agencies

8. on request; materials and correspondence would offer continuing aid afterwards.

9. Southern Staff Training (amount and time period to be established) -- A program, combining elements of internship and in-service training, designed to prepare potential intergroup relations workers (now in peripheral agencies) for municipal and state agency openings that will be occurring with increasing frequency in the South. This is a long-range program, with short-range values as well.

10. Conference for City Planners
11. Conference for Redevelopers (Amounts to be established)

Proposed by Helen Amerman, these meetings would follow the pattern established some years ago in NAIRO's Police-Community Relations Conference; a consultation for city planners or redevelopers or both, together with their intergroup relations agency counterparts in the same cities.

12. The Grand Package ($250,000 annually for 3-5 years) -- Proposed originally in 1958, this would incorporate (a) research services, (b) training services, (c) consultant services, (d) program services (membership services and special projects), and (e) informational services. It could logically incorporate and support eight or nine of the Approved projects, one or two of the Committee proposals, and six or seven of the Suggested projects above. (The major addition in 1960 might be: (f) International Services, at an annual budget of $50,000.)

PRESENT: Frederick Routh, presiding; Helen Amerman, John Binkley, Louise Blackham, Virginia Coffey, Frances Cousens, George Culberson, Lloyd Davis, Louis Ervin, Frank Fager, Margaret Garrity, Burton Gordin, Theodore Leskes, Edward Rutledge, Beulah Whitby, John Yoshino.

Guests: Marshall Bragdon, John Buggs, Eleanor Dungan, William Gremley, Robert Hoffman, John Hope, II, Virginia Huebner, Booker McGraw, Howard McKinney, Annabel Prescott, Joseph Robison, Adele Young, Frankye Brown, John Lassoe, Jr.

I. Virginia Coffey, Conference Arrangements Chairman, reported briefly on final arrangements. She noted an advance registration of over 100, high for NAIRO conferences. With a goal of $2,500, the Conference Finance Committee (Marshall Bragdon, chairman) reported $2,400 in hand or firmly promised, and an additional $200 pledged if needed.

II. John Lassoe reported for the Conference Program Committee (David Danzig, chairman). A final tally showed 78 members and 10 non-members with program assignments. Although the figure was high, it was noted that it will become increasingly difficult to involve NAIRO members as the membership grows. With the present membership (679) and the present rate of participation (78), it would take over 8 years to include all. It also becomes more difficult to involve each and every segment of the membership; the labor union people, for example, had complained that none of their number had received a program assignment this year.

Mention was made of the first NAIRO section meeting, scheduled for Thursday morning. Called by Paul Ertel (Chicago Commission on Human Relations), it is an attempt to draw together all involved in migration services.

III. Minutes of the September 16-17 meeting were approved (Garrity-Whitby, CARRIED).

IV. The Treasurer, Burton Gordin, presented his report for the period,

January 1 - November 9, 1960. It showed disbursements of $33,761.70 and receipts of $31,032.87. The balance on hand (exclusive of the Executive Secretary's severance account) is $2,637.22. (Statement attached). ADOPTED WITHOUT DISSENT.

V. Reporting for the Finance Committee, Burton Gordin noted that funds in hand and firmly anticipated made continued operation likely through April or May, 1961. It will be necessary to raise $14,500 from sources not now anticipated to carry NAIRO through 1961, but at least $6,000 of this amount is already a strong possibility.

The Development Fund goal for 1961 was set at $1,500, with pledges to be solicited at the Conference and, from those not in attendance, by mail. (Gordin-Yoshino, CARRIED). The Board launched the drive by pledging $320 (23 Directors and guests) on the spot.

It was recommended to the incoming Board that separate chairmen be named for the Development Fund drive, the Life Memberships drive, and the Sponsors of NAIRO Committee.

VI. Edward Rutledge, chairman of the Commission on Housing and Family Life, reported briefly on the Housing Opportunity Program now being developed by NAIRO and the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing. One Meeting of an advisory group has been held, and another will follow on November 29th. It is hoped that the proposal will be ready for submission to foundations by January 15th. (Second draft attached.)

VII. The Board endorsed the proposed change in the By-Laws (i.e. creating a Legal Committee and granting its chairman ex officio Board membership) that will be voted on by the membership at the Annual Meeting. (Garrity-Fager, CARRIED).

VIII. Applications for Chapter Charters were received from two localities:

Metropolitan Pittsburgh (Yoshino-Garrity, GRANTED)
Northern California (Amerman-Whitby, GRANTED)

In discussion, Edward Rutledge suggested that the Legal Counsel develop a set of recommendations governing model local By-Laws, with special attention to the area of Chapter public statements. Helen Amerman noted that flexibility is needed since the size of the Chapter area and other local differences can affect the nature of the By-Laws. Theodore Leskes observed that most of the Chapter By-Laws adopted and approved to date lacked provision for National Board ratification of any future amendments.

IX. In view of the report of the Finance Committee presented earlier, the continuation indefinitely of the National Office was voted. (Rutledge-Garrity, CARRIED).

X. Theodore Leskes, chairman of the Editorial Board, reported that non-member subscriptions to the JOURNAL OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS had reached a total of 467, a gain of 52 since September 17. Approximately 336 subscription renewals, or a total of $2,000, can be anticipated in or by January. Without dissent, the Board voted commendation of

Samuel Spiegler, JOURNAL editor, and the entire Editorial Board, for their efforts and success during the first year of publication.

Discussion of the DIRECTORY OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS AGENCIES WITH PAID PROFESSIONAL STAFF brought agreement that, despite the slow sale of this publication, there is acute need for annual or biennial revision to bring it up-to-date.

XI. The report of the Membership Committee (Frances Cousens, Chairman) was postponed until the post-Conference Board meeting.

XII. Booker T. McGraw reported for the Nominating Committee (see attached). Having heard the recommendations of the Committee, the Board was in accord with dissatisfaction expressed with the present system and registered its approval of the intent of the recommendations (Culberson-Whitby, CARRIED). The Board revered its policy of limiting the Nominating Committee to one nomination per vacancy, and the number to be nominated for any post was left to the discretion of the Nominating Committee. (Rutledge-Ervin, CARRIED).

XIII. It was decided that the report of the Resolutions Committee (Joseph Robison, chairman) should be read to the membership at the initial Business Meeting, distributed in mimeographed form during the day, and acted upon at the closing Business Meeting (Friday, November 18). (Culberson-Garrity, CARRIED).

* * * *

The meeting adjourned after President Routh had expressed his appreciation to the members of the Board for their cooperation during the year of his administration.

Respectfully submitted,

VIRGINIA COFFEY, Secretary

JOHN V.P. LASSOE, JR.,

TOWARD EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN HOUSING: OUTLINE OF A FIVE-YEAR EXPERIMENTAL ACTION PROGRAM

More than a year has passed since two monumental studies provided America with an unchallengeable picture of racial discrimination in its housing practices. The reports of the Commission on Race and Housing (1958) and the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights (1959) analyzed soberly the barriers to equal opportunity and recommended forthrightly the action that would remove them. These reports concurred on most points of a multi-faceted program aimed at nothing less than eradication of one of the nation's most pressing social problems.

The facts are available. The recommendations are clear. With these tools in hand, there is rich opportunity to mount a massive assault on racial discrimination in housing. In the meantime, an enormous investment sits on the shelf. While more than $750,000 was spent on the two studies, the amount available to date for implementation has been infinitesimal.

If funds can now be found, that implementation can begin. It will require personnel, the development of effective approaches, and the mobilization of a variety of resources. This proposal addresses itself to those needs.

PROPOSAL

The National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials (NAIRO) offers to administer and coordinate a nationwide, five-year program involving a large number of agencies and institutions in a variety of projects designed to recruit and train personnel, test and evaluate community action approaches, influence the crucial area of urban planning and redevelopment, and provide certain interim services for those involved in housing opportunity programs.

I. PROBLEM: There is a shortage of persons who combine in their training or experience intergroup relations knowledge and skill with the technical knowledge and skill of such fields as real estate, mortgage financing, city planning, and housing and redevelopment. Such persons are needed to staff all of the agencies and institutions whose activities bear on housing opportunity.

PROJECTS: One-year internships (on-the-job training) in intergroup relations agencies that have good housing opportunity programs and can offer adequate supervision, for new recruits to the intergroup relations field.

One-year internships in intergroup relations agencies that have good housing programs and can offer adequate supervision, for junior professionals from such fields as city planning, mortgage financing, city planning, real estate, and housing and redevelopment. (These interns would return to their respective fields at year's end.)

One-year internships in selected housing, city planning, real estate, redevelopment, and housing agencies, for junior intergroup relations workers who lack technical knowledge and skill in these fields. (These interns would return to intergroup relations agencies after the year's training.)

II. PROBLEM: There is need to develop effective approaches for use by community organizations working for equal opportunity in housing. Such approaches must be tested and evaluated in a variety of situations, involving both governmental bodies and voluntary associations.

PROJECTS: Systematic study and evaluation of existing housing opportunity programs, through field visits by qualified experts, through community research projects, and through the staffing of selected citizens' groups.

Development and testing of new approaches to housing opportunity, through experimentation with existing groups or through the formation of new organizations. Both would need the services of qualified personnel.

(NAIRO would be responsible for the recruitment, orientation, and continuing supervision of staff assigned to groups in this experimentation.)

III. PROBLEM: Crucial to long-range development of equal opportunity in housing is the complex of urban planning and redevelopment. Regional and metropolitan studies now underway will shape tomorrow's urban areas. Many do not now reflect intergroup relations concerns and threaten, therefore, to perpetuate residential patterns that operate against equal opportunity in housing.

PROJECTS: Inventory and evaluation of regional and metropolitan studies in terms of intergroup relations concerns.

Experimental development of techniques for sensitizing those responsible for such studies to intergroup relations concerns.

Experimental projects in at least three major urban areas -- in the East, Midwest, and Far West -- designed to demonstrate methods of incorporating intergroup relations concerns into planning and redevelopment.

IV. PROBLEM: The training of workers, the development (through testing and evaluation) of approaches, and the influencing of urban planning and redevelopment will take time. In the meantime, there is immediate value to be gained from a variety of special services and projects.

PROJECTS: A series of regional or local conferences for those in decision-making posts in such fields as real estate, mortgage financing, construction, redevelopment, city planning, and intergroup relations.

Experimental programs in a variety of college communities, utilizing and testing approaches developed by SCAD in Ithaca (Cornell). These would be followed by a series of regional conferences for college officials, to discuss results and encourage similar projects.

Expansion of existing informational and consultative services (such as those offered by the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing), to service community groups engaged in housing opportunity programs.

Establishment of a consultative service, to provide the best possible advice and help for builders, realtors, and bankers prepared to offer equal opportunity in sales, rentals, and financing. (An organized consultant program could utilize -- on a fee basis -- the talents of the most competent intergroup relations workers around the country.)

Development of materials, syllabi, and training manuals for institutes designed to train workers responsible for the implementation of relevant federal, state, and local legislation and administrative rulings.

RESOURCES

The program will require the expert knowledge and services of many workers, and the participation and cooperation of intergroup relations agencies throughout the country.

For the administration and coordination of this program, NAIRO proposes to add to its staff such experienced personnel as may be needed to supervise the respective projects, orient workers conduct research, and service community groups.

For the specific training situations, for the experimentation with approaches, for the projects designed to influence urban planning and redevelopment (including the experimental action programs), and for various of the special interim projects, NAIRO would enlist the cooperation of existing intergroup relations agencies, channeling to them the funds necessary to subsidize their participation.

Since the skilled workers are among its members and since it has a preexisting liaison with the intergroup relations agencies, NAIRO is in a favorable position to serve as administrator and coordinator. It brings to this task a thirteen-year history of interest and experience in helping intergroup relations workers acquire the knowledge and skill necessary for effective action. To this end, NAIRO has long concerned itself with developing communication and exchange of information across agency and geographic lines, with the training of new workers and the professional growth of the more experiences, and with the stimulation of needed research in various areas of intergroup relations.

REPORT OF NAIRO ELECTION FOR 1960-61
by Chairman of Nominating Committee

A. The Election Process

It would appear helpful first to provide the NAIRO membership with a brief delineation of the actual process through which this Mail-Ballot election was conducted, as follows:

1. The Nominating Committee members, lacking an opportunity to meet together, were initially requested by mail to record individually a first and second name for each elective position listed on a preliminary ballot form and return same to the Chairman.

2. The two names, with the highest and second highest count, from the tabulation of these initial returns from Committee Members, were recorded on a form for each elective position and mailed to the Committee members, with a request to check their respective first preferences and return the checked form to the Chairman. This was necessary because, unfortunately, the Nominating Committee was limited to presenting only one candidate for each position.

3. The tabulation of the second mail returns from Committee members produced the concensus committee slate of candidates, each of whom was individually contacted for acceptance or rejection of the nomination and each case of a nominee's rejecting was replaced with the person next in line from the tabulated returns.

4. This final Committee slate of candidates was mailed to the entire NAIRO membership specifying the interim for members to file petitions for inclusion of additional candidates on the final election Mail-Ballot, but none was received.

5. Thus, the final Committee slate became the final slate of candidates on the election Mail-Ballot distributed to the NAIRO membership for voting and returning to the Chairman by November 4, 1960.

Incidentally, it should be noted that throughout this process strict tabulation of returns has dictated the results at each step; names with the highest counts were taken from the tabulated returns, and in cases of ties the names were taken in alphabetical order. Your Nominating Committee Chairman elected to follow this strict tabulation procedure reflecting the collective views of Committee members, rather than exercise a personal judgment seeking improved representation and balance through unilateral action.

All returns were tabulated by the Chairman of the Nominating Committee and are available to any NAIRO member for inspection upon request.

B. The Election Results

Your Nominating Committee Chairman received 92 ballot returns, of which 80 ballots had all names of candidates checked, 11 had one or more names unchecked, and 1 was returned with none checked. Thus, in accordance with present NAIRO election regulations and procedures, the full slate of candidates in the subject election Mail-Ballot is hereby certified as having been duly elected for 1960-61, as follows:

President-Elect:	Lloyd Davis
Vice-Presidents:	Booker T. McGraw and Edward I. Rutledge
Secretary:	Virginia Coffey
Treasurer:	Burton I. Gordin
Board Directors:	Edwin C. Berry	Frances Levenson
	Frances R. Cousens	Alan Reitman
	Malcolm B. Higgins	Frederick B. Routh

Nominating Committee:
(11 for 1 year terms) John G. Feild, Chairman

Alexander J. Allen	Edward Howden
Arnold Aronson	Arthur Johnson
Eleanor T. Dungan	Charles Livermore
Margaret Garrity	Herman H. Long
Chester J. Gray	George Schermer

C. Proposed Revisions in Mail-Ballot Election

Experience indicates some serious deficiencies in present regulations and procedures of our Mail-Ballot election and thus the urgent need for improving our election machinery so as to render the entire election process and results more efficient and democratic in coverage and balance, representative of all significant elements and interests among NAIRO membership. To this end, these proposed revisions are recommended for study and adoption as follows:

1. That the Nominating Committee be authorized and required to present a slate of at least two candidates for each elective position on the Ballot, in lieu the present limitation upon the Committee to nominate only one candidate for each elective position.

2. That the election Mail-Ballot distributed to the NAIRO membership be accompanied with a brief biographical sketch of each nominee on the Ballot.

3. That the Nominating Committee of eleven be composed of the eight Regional Chairmen serving at the time of its recomposition plus three additional members appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the NAIRO Board, and also that the designation of a member as Committee Chairman be similarly made.

4. That the annual recomposition of the Nominating Committee be effected by the President not less than thirty (30) days prior to the convening of the forthcoming Annual Convention, with the Chairman instructed to schedule an initial meeting of the Committee at the Convention and urge all Committee members to attend.

5. That an Election Board, composed of the Executive Secretary and two (nearby) Board Members of NAIRO appointed by the President, be established to receive and tabulate the election Mail-Ballot returns and report the certified election results to the Annual Convention.

In conclusion, it is believed that the adoption of these proposed revisions, which conform to wide usage, would so enhance the operating efficacy of our Mail-Ballot election as to warrant its continuance as standard practice of NAIRO, just as has come to be the case among similar National Professional Associations generally. The patent advantages of such Mail-Ballot process and results over other election methods include the opportunity for all financial members in good standing not only to vote for their choice among all candidates for each elective position, but also to effect, through petition of three members, the inclusion of additional candidates to supplement the Nominating Committee's slate of nominees. Additionally, the Mail-Ballot election precludes the risk of an Annual Convention becoming embroiled with politicizing while facilitating full Convention concentration on the professional business of NAIRO.

The Chairman wishes to note his appreciation to the Committee members and to the office of the Executive Secretary for gracious cooperation; and also to make it plain that he is solely responsible for this report which has not been cleared through the Committee members for lack of time. Finally, it is hoped that this report and particularly its proposals will receive thorough discussion by the body assembled and also Committee or Board study for recommended official action.

ANNUAL MEMBERSHIP MEETING
CINCINNATI, OHIO
NOVEMBER 15-18, 1960

MINUTES

TUESDAY, November 15, 1960: A quorum of the membership present; Frederick B. Routh, President, presiding.

The first draft of the Annual Statement of Concerns and Commitments was presented by Joseph Robison, chairman of the Resolutions Committee. Action was deferred until Friday morning, November 18th.

The report of the Nominating Committee was presented by Booker T. McGraw, chairman. (See APPENDIX, Board Minutes, November 14th Meeting). After floor discussion, the following motions were adopted:

(1) In the future, the mail ballot shall be accompanied by brief biographical sketches of all candidates.

(2) An election board, consisting of the Executive Secretary and two nearby Board members (appointed by the President), shall be established each year to receive and tabulate mail election ballot returns and to certify results to the Annual Meeting.

(3) The Legal Committee shall draft an amendment to the NAIRO By-Laws containing, in appropriate language, the following provisions:

* The members of each region shall each year nominate three individuals who are not members of that region, to serve on the Nominating Committee for the following year.
* The names of the 24 persons so nominated shall appear on the mail ballot sent out that year; from these 24 persons, eight shall be elected by vote.
* The President shall have the right, following the election, to appoint three additional members-at-large.

AMENDMENT: This matter shall be referred to the Board of Directors for further study and for assignment to a committee to be appointed by the President, to draft language that will carry out the intent of the Nominating Committee.

(4) The Nominating Committee shall submit at least two names for each office to be filled. (Vote: FOR, 44; AGAINST, 39)

(5) The Legal Committee shall examine the above motion to ascertain if it is compatible or in conflict with the By-Laws, reporting back to the membership during this Annual Meeting.

(6) The report of the Nominating Committee and the intent of its recommendations was accepted.

The following memorial resolutions were adopted unanimously:

(1) The death of JOSEPH KAPLAN in Boston, Massachusetts this month is noted sadly by his fellow-members. His was a unique contribution to the field of intergroup relations, and we shall all miss his leadership and his warm friendliness.

(2) NAIRO recalls with sadness the news of the death of ELEANOR WRIGHT earlier this year. The loss of her talents and dedication will be felt in our field and in the hearts of those who called her friend.

(3) NAIRO pauses in its deliberations to take saddened note of the death of BORIS JOFFE, our colleague and friend. His wise counsel and mature leadership will be missed, not only in his own community but by all who labor for a more democratic society.

(4) To the family of FRED GROSSMAN we extend our deepest sympathy upon his tragic death on August 19, 1960. The Anti-Defamation League, the community in which he lived and worked, the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials, and intergroup relations workers have lost a skilled and dedicated worker and colleague.

Respected for his wise counsel and held in affection for his warmth and honesty, he earned the trust and admiration of all who knew him. To those of us in NAIRO especially, to whom he gave unstintingly, his death leaves a void which will not be filled. He will be remembered and revered.

WEDNESDAY, November 16, 1960: A quorum of the membership present; Frederick B. Routh, President, presiding.

Frank S. Loescher reported for the Committee on International Relations, sketching the development of the committee and its various assignments, including the international survey of intergroup relations work (to which the Committee has given first priority and for which it now seeks foundation support).

Frances Cousens reported for the Membership Committee, outlining the sharp rise in membership around the country (total today: 681) and describing the recruitment efforts of her committee.

The report of the Executive Secretary is appended.

George W. Culberson reported for the Resources and Planning Committee, outlining its history, composition, and activities during 1960.

On a motion by Frederick B. Routh, seconded by Robert Greene, the following amendments to the NAIRO By-Laws were adopted:

In Article IX, Section 1, insert as sub-section:

"d. A Legal Committee, which shall advise the Board of Directors (and Executive Secretary, if any) on legal matters relating to the Association. The Chairman of this Committee and its members shall be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Board. The Chairman shall be designated as Legal Counsel and, if not otherwise a member of the Board, shall serve ex officio during his term in office."

In Article VII, Section 1, change the first sentence to read:

"1. The affairs of the Association shall be managed by a Board of Directors which shall consist of not more than thirty-four (34) members, and not less than eighteen (18). . . ."

Samuel Spiegler, editor, The Journal of Intergroup Relations, reported on the editorial policy, history, circulation, promotion, and future plans of that quarterly.

FRIDAY, November 18, 1960: A quorum of the membership present; George W. Culberson, President, presiding.

Burton I. Gordin, Treasurer, presented his report for the period, January 1-November 9, 1960. (See Appendix, Board Minutes, November 14th Meeting).

Reporting for the Finance Committee, Mr. Gordin also outlined the financial prospects for the Association during 1961 and described the Life Membership category and the Development Fund, both established by the Board of Directors during 1960.

A resolution on employment of NAIRO members was adopted. (See APPENDIX, Board Minutes, November 18th meeting).

The 1960 Statement of Concerns and Commitments was adopted.

THE INTERGROUP RELATIONS WORKER AND THE PERPETUATION OF THE SPECIES

Annual Report of the Executive Secretary
Cincinnati, Ohio - November 16, 1960

In this year's report to the membership, I want to focus on just one aspect of NAIRO's concern and activity in the intergroup relations field: the problem of supply and demand in professional replacement.

There is little likelihood that the intergroup relations worker will die out by virtue of being unwanted or unneeded, but there are indications that he may one day fade away for lack of replacement.

The field's personnel needs mount steadily, but our manpower supply is almost static. With appetites whetted by budget increases or staff turnover, agencies turn hungrily to gobble up new workers, only to find a shortage of qualified people within the profession (for higher-level openings) and an inadequate flow of promising recruits (for junior professional vacancies). Jobs can and do go unfilled, even begging, for months on end.

There are, we estimate, 100 job openings in intergroup relations agencies each year. Frankly, there is evidence that even this figure is low; NAIRO posts only forty to sixty vacancies annually, but does not include openings in the major national private agencies or in many public agencies bound by rigid residence requirements. In any case, the number of openings is increasing each year, probably for a variety of reasons:

(1) In addition to normal attrition (death, retirement, intra-agency advancement, normal inter-agency movement, and departures from the field), there are signs of greater restlessness among intergroup relations workers. There was certainly an enormous amount of job-shifting in the twelve months ending last June, and, while this may be the normal consequence of a field's advance to maturity, it wreaked havoc with NAIRO's addressograph plates.

(2) An unusually large number of new jobs have been created in public agencies. Budgets have been climbing steadily, and each month sees the birth of at least one additional staffed municipal agency (just as each legislative season sees the creation of one or more staffed state bodies). Even the federal government has been active in this regard, and there is reason to suggest that it may be even more so in the future. Significantly, the steadily swelling flow of inquiries relating to the establishment of public agencies in the South has begun to include the first requests for help in finding professional staff.

(3) There is growth in the number of intergroup relations jobs in peripheral fields or, at least, an increase in the number of requests from such agencies for people with intergroup relations experience. Boards of Education, housing and redevelopment agencies, community councils, and neighborhood centers seem, more and more, to want what we have to offer -- even if we are hard-pressed to define just what that is.

This lusty demand for the flesh of intergroup relations workers may be reassuring for those of us troubled about job security, but it is raising monstrous problems for agencies that have positions to fill. I suggest here that we must move rapidly to find answers to some pressing questions:

(1) What are we looking for in our replacements? How long can we continue to issue job descriptions that call for "x years of intergroup relations experience," without defining some of the skills, knowledge, and other professional attributes that we seek? This lack of definition is a problem at all levels, but is most painfully obvious in the recruitment of junior professionals or in the counseling of those who would prepare for careers in our field. (Within NAIRO, this continues to be the major concern of the Professional Standards Committee, but it must be said that, while successive committees have labored diligently and productively, our cumulative progress toward definition has been negligible.)

(2) Where do we find our replacements? At lower job levels, there is no ready answer. Whether we are trying to attract people fresh out of graduate school or to lure them from peripheral fields, the problem of lack of definition is compounded by the lack of ready channels into the field. The number of newcomers needed each year is still relatively small, perhaps too small to justify a network of full-fledged training centers, but we must somehow find and train this new blood. Lacking the replacement supply that other fields find routinely in their professional schools, we must locate or develop alternative sources, at least temporarily.

The thirsty quest for new blood is complicated, of course, by one peculiar feature of intergroup relations employment: there are almost no beginners' jobs! Of forty jobs posted by NAIRO in its Personnel Registry since last November, for example, all required at least one year of paid professional experience in intergroup relations or a closely allied field (all but one job, in fact, required two years or more).

Here, we can pause to lament the passing of the National Internship Program, ended after a few promising years because of the inability or unwillingness of foundations to provide the necessary partial subsidization (there was no shortage, let me add, of agencies willing and able to pay half of the training cost). In its brief history, the program proved to be a highly successful bridge between academic training and professional employment; its demise leaves the newcomer without that formal channel -- and leaves the field without a training ground!

(3) How then do we train our replacements? If we can attract promising people to the field, what do we teach them? who will teach them? Where will they be taught? Is it to be the job of human relations centers, born or yet unborn? Can the agencies do the job? Is there a role for schools of other professions (e.g. social work)? How will we define the basic knowledge desired, as well as the skill training needed? (NAIRO's Educational and Professional Training Committee, which supervised the Internship Program, should perhaps now concern itself with translating that rich experience into practical guidance for others who may undertake the training of recruits.)

(4) Finally, how do we place our replacements? Despite the need for workers at all levels, placement is beset by a host of problems. For one thing, promising recruits may not be available in the city that has the job opening: one public agency searched for nearly a year to fill a beginner's post that required no experience! This is, of course, compounded by the fact that most agencies lack funds for out-of-town applicants' travel to interviews: another public agency invited distant workers to come for interviews -- but warned that it could pay travel expenses of only the person finally hired! This lack of funds for recruitment travel virtually insures that the search for talent will be confined to the immediate vicinity.

There is, secondly, a growing tendency within public agencies to require or, at least, prefer that applicants be residents of that city or state. In many cases, this is crystallized in law or in civil service regulations; even where it is not mandatory, however, commissions are sensitive to the general feeling that native sons should get available government jobs. While this is not unnatural, it may prevent consideration of far better qualified candidates.

Residence enters into another aspect of intergroup relations placement: the filling of agency positions in the South. In almost every instance, Southern residence or, at least, prior exposure to the South is deemed essential. Since the delicate and demanding nature of Southern intergroup relations work also dictates an experience requirement, and since there are still relatively few intergroup relations workers in the South, the filling of these positions presents extraordinary problems. (Rather than urge any waiving of Southern background or experience as prerequisites for agency employment, I would here stress the urgent necessity for a revived NAIRO Internship Program in that area.)

I am moved to turn briefly to the question of in-service training and professional growth. How, in effect, can we best prepare the field's current workers for higher-level openings?

Within large agencies, there is always the possibility of formal and systematic in-service training. I am not sure that this is as common as it should be. In any case, smaller agencies -- far more numerous than large in our field -- face a different problem: who trains a one-man staff or, if there are two, is Horace Mann's concept of education appropriate for professional training? This must apparently be tackled on a city-wide seminar basis or through regional conferences and institutes. NAIRO could indeed be the vehicle, but, unless foundation funds can be found, agencies must be persuaded to set aside budget money for this type of program.

In order to keep alive an intriguing idea, I mention again a self-development proposal first noted in the publication of the American Association of University Professors: namely, that an amount equivalent to 4% of each worker's salary be set aside in the agency budget, for his use in professional growth -- including courses, books, travel to professional meetings, research projects, or any other programs approved by, let us say, a staff or Board committee.

Thinking even more specifically of the NAIRO structure, I have wondered, usually without arriving at answers, about the possible role in professional growth of NAIRO Commissions and Departments. The former focus on substantive areas of concern: how can they best transmit to the intergroup relations worker the concepts and knowledge that they develop or synthesize? The latter focus on method or technique, generally in terms of agency role: how can they best involve themselves in advanced skill training? How, in short, can we develop an ever-expanding textbook for our field

THE JOURNAL OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS is one of the brightest jewels in NAIRO's crown. I can say this without being immodest because the credit goes elsewhere: to Samuel Spiegler, the Editor; to the Editorial Board and its chairman, Theodore Leskes; to the contributors, of whom we need many more; and to the Board of Directors, who had the courage to plunge into a venture that is still heavily subsidized. Hearing all the favorable comment and excited reaction to this quarterly, I wonder how it can best be used as an aid in professional growth. Can there be staff meetings built around analyses and discussion of key articles? Does the JOURNAL merit the "required reading" designation? Can local chapters pick up some of its articles as the subject of their meetings?

I have asked many questions because I feel that they are part of a broad concern that we share. In saying that the field must occasionally raise its eyes from the difficult and demanding work at hand, to focus on such matters as standards, training, recruitment, placement, and professional growth, I risk the charge that I am off again on the professionalism kick. Heaven knows, enough people see in me the incarnation of all they believe NAIRO is doing and will do to rob intergroup relations of the bloom of dedication.

What those critics fail to see, and what I want to be sure no one else fails to see, is that professionalism is -- in the best sense and in the only sense in which I construe it -- the conscious effort to substitute for trial and error (sometimes unkindly called "dedicated ignorance") planned activity, based on the whole field's evaluated experience and carried out by people equipped by temperament and training (or their own experience) to do the job effectively. One aspect of professionalism is the preparation of those workers, and -- in many ways -- this is now our most important collective task.

APPENDIX NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS OFFICIALS

Resolution on EMPLOYMENT OF NAIRO MEMBERS

There is a belief by a number of NAIRO members that NAIRO has a responsibility to protect the job security and right to work of its members. This responsibility is inherent in the nature of a professional organization.

Hiring, upgrading and job maintenance with undue regard for non-performance factors such as religion, national origin, race, political affiliation, organizational membership, and matters of the conscience, is anathema to the very principle for which NAIRO stands. The prime employment consideration must be that of merit, as it must be for employers in the larger employment market.

To work toward this goal, the following recommendations are hereby presented:

1. that the NAIRO membership accept this resolution in principle at the 14th Annual Conference

2. that, at the same annual conference, the NAIRO membership instruct its incoming Board of Directors to organize a committee or activate any existing committee whose responsibilities will be the following:

   A. make a thorough investigation of the problem referred to in this resolution

   B. develop broad professional standards which employing agencies should use in the selection of personnel and, at the same time, enumerate those standards or ethical considerations which should not be used

   C. develop a workable plan of procedures through which the machinery of communication with and policing of agencies employment NAIRO members may be put into effect so that the intent of this resolution may be carried out

   D. bring the results of its work in the form of definite recommendations for action by the membership to the 15th Annual Conference.

ADOPTED AT ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING, NOVEMBER 18, 1960.

NAIRO BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
POST-CONFERENCE MEETING
NOVEMBER 18, 1960

MINUTES

PRESENT: George Culberson, presiding; Helen Amerman, Arnold Aronson, John Binkley, Louise Blackham, Virginia Coffey, Frances Cousens, Lloyd Davis, Frank Fager, Irving Goldaber, Burton Gordin, K.C. Jones, Jr., Theodore Leskes, Frances Levenson, Wade Mackie, Booker T. McGraw, John Morsell, Alan Reitman, Frederick Routh, Edward Rutledge, John Yoshino.

Guests: Marshall Bragdon, Samuel Danley, Robert Greene, William Gremley, Carl Hanley, John Hope, II, Edward Howden, Richard Meana, John Lassoe.

I. Theodore Leskes was named by the President, and approved by the Board (Routh-Rutledge, CARRIED), as Legal Counsel and chairman of the Legal Committee.

John Yoshino was named by the President, and approved by the Board (Davis-Fager, CARRIED), as Membership Chairman.

The President appointed, and the Board endorsed (McGraw-Routh, CARRIED), the following Regional Chairmen: Northeast - Emanuel Muravchik; Middle South - David Sawyer; Southeast - Paul Rilling; North Central - Louis Ervin; South Central - Wade Mackie; Northwest - Louise Blackham; Southwest - Helen Amerman; and Great Lakes - K.C. Jones, Jr.

The President suggested that regional boundaries require careful reconsideration and perhaps redrafting. He will ask the Regional Chairmen to submit their recommendations for boundary changes in time for discussion at the January Board meeting.

The President appointed, and the Board approved (Davis-Binkley, CARRIED) the following Department chairmen: Local Private - Robert Greene; Local Public - Howard McKinney; National Private - Saal Lesser; State Public - Virginia Huebner; Federal Services - Philip Sadler.

The Board elected three of its members (John Yoshino, John Morsell, and Frederick Routh) to serve with the officers on the Executive Committee.

II. The 1961 Budget (attached) was adopted (Routh-Cousens, CARRIED). It was agreed that, although the total amount allocated for use by regional chairmen was cut to $400, each regional chairman could still draw up to $100 for use in his area. Past experience had shown, however, that only a few regional chairmen actually draw on this fund.

III. Although unable to accept appointment as Conference Chairman, Helen Amerman agreed to help coordinate 1961 Conference activities until a suitable chairman can be found and named. This selection was then deferred until January, as was approval of the exact wording of the Conference theme.

Richard Marks was appointed, and confirmed by the Board (Routh-Binkley, CARRIED), as chairman of the Conference Program Committee, which will be centered in Detroit in 1961.

IV. The Board adopted the recommendations of the Resources and Planning Committee governing the role, function, and structure of NAIRO Commissions (Rutledge-Cousens, CARRIED); (a) that the Commissions be retained, with two name changes - Housing and Family Life to become Housing and Urban Development, and Other Civil Rights to become Civil Rights (with that Commission focusing on some specific area within that broad context, e.g., public accommodations, voting); (b) that the Commissions retain their broad functions, i.e., to report factual developments in their areas of interest and to analyze implications of these for the field and its workers; (c) that the work of the seven Commissions be integrated and coordinated by the Resources and Planning Committee, to which all Commission chairmen would belong; (d) that the membership of each Commission consist of 10-15 experts invited by the Chairman (in consultation with the President), with up to 10-15 additional members allowed to volunteer their services (All Commission members would accept, as a condition of membership, the obligation to attend one meeting annually other than that held at the Annual Conference); (e) that Commissions function on a continuing basis, responsible for an Annual Progress Report to the Board of Directors, but publishing reports, books or other substantive material only when ready to do so (hopefully every three years); (f) that Commissions be represented on the Conference Program Committee and that their Conference sessions be integrated more fully into the basic theme.

In discussion, it was agreed that Commissions need no longer be city-centered and should, indeed, strive for national representation. It was indicated that their representation on the Conference Program Committee would be for purposes of liaison and for the development of better Conference sessions, not for any shaping of Commission study.

The President appointed, and the Board approved (Leskes-McGraw, CARRIED) the following Commission chairmen: Education - H. Harry Giles; Housing and Urban Development - Edward Rutledge; Nature, Scope and Theory - Frederick Routh; Manpower Utilization - John Hope, II; Interreligious Relations - Albert Vorspan; Research Services - George Grier.

Subject to confirmation at a later date, the President was then authorized to appoint alternates, should any of the above decline. (Routh-Goldaber, CARRIED). The President was also authorized to select the immediate subject emphasis of the Civil Rights Commission and to appoint a chairman, subject to later confirmation. (McGraw-Routh, CARRIED).

V. The President appointed, and the Board approved (Binkley-McGraw, CARRIED), the following Committee chairmen: Finance - Burton I. Gordin; ./.

Resources and Planning - Lloyd Davis; Resolutions - Harold Fleming; Interprofessional Relations - John Slawson; Editorial Board - Theodore Leskes; Special Interdepartmental - David Danzig; International Relations - Frank Loescher; International Exchange - William Gremley; Public Relations - Joseph Monserrat.

The President proposed, and the Board approved by consensus, the abolition of the Special Interdisciplinary Committee and the Publications Committee. The President proposed, and the Board approved (Davis-McGraw, CARRIED), a rotation system for members of the JOURNAL Editorial Board: all would serve, as appointed, through 1961, but one-third, or five, of the members would be replaced each year thereafter.

VI. The Membership Committee (Frances Cousens, 1960 chairman) offered its recommendations on the contributors category, Sponsors of NAIRO. As agreed earlier by the Board, non-members contributing $25 or more in any year would be termed "sponsors." Each would receive the JOURNAL for that year, invitations to Conferences and other NAIRO meetings, and other appropriate special mailings (but not the Newsletter or internal business material). Names of Sponsors would be printed in some publication each year.

The President was authorized to appoint a Sponsors Committee of nationally-known lay people, with a NAIRO member as secretary or co-ordinator. (Rutledge-Gordin, CARRIED). This Committee will solicit sponsors or recommend names to be solicited, operating on the national, regional or local level as seems appropriate.

The Board went on record, in establishing the Sponsors category, that NAIRO will consistently strive to avoid competition with local agencies and their fund-raising efforts. (Gordin-Jones, CARRIED).

VII. Frederick Routh was named to head the Development Fund appeal and will sign a letter addressed to all members who have not yet pledged funds. (Jones-Amerman, CARRIED).

VIII. The President was empowered to name co-chairmen for the Life Membership Drive, selecting one professional and one lay member to appeal to their respective categories within NAIRO's ranks. (McGraw-Goldaber, CARRIED)

IX. The Board received a bid for the 1963 Annual Conference from Cleveland professionals. Choice of the 1963 site was tabled until the January meeting (Routh-Binkley, CARRIED).

X. The report of the NAIRO Newcomers Committee (William Gremley, chairman), scheduled for presentation, was tabled until the January meeting (Routh-Mackie, CARRIED). It will be submitted in writing to Board members before that date.

XI. The Board, instructed by the membership to develop wording for a resolution on the New Orleans disturbances surrounding the integration of schools, adopted (McGraw-Yoshino, CARRIED) the following:

"The National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials, deeply concerned with the current development of lawless defiance of Federal District Court orders in New Orleans, Louisiana, points to the wisdom of the words of Mr. Justice Brandeis:

"'In a government of laws, existence of the government will be imperiled if it fails to observe the law scrupulously. Our government is the potent, omnipresent teacher. For good or ill, it teaches the whole people by its example. Crime is contagious. If the government becomes a lawbreaker, it breeds contempt for law; it invites every man to become a law until himself; it invites anarchy.'

"NAIRO calls upon those in authority in Louisiana to observe and obey the law. We call upon all law-abiding citizens to join with us in recognizing the validity of the action of the Federal District Court in implementing the United States Supreme Court decision of May 17, 1954.

"We call for support of law enforcement agencies -- at every level -- which seek to restore and maintain a state of law and order under which the democratic process and the rights of all are protected."

XII. The Board developed, upon request of the Chicago NAIRO Chapter chairman, advisory rulings on three policy matters that had come before him recently. These were reported by the Executive Secretary.

(1) A request that he, as NAIRO Chapter Chairman, wire all intergroup relations agencies in Chicago, urging them in turn to wire the Governor of Georgia re: The Martin Luther King case.

The Board determined, by consensus, that this would be improper. As a matter of policy, it is not the role of NAIRO to urge action upon agencies. This is not something that the national body would do; as a rule of thumb, therefore, it cannot permit a Chapter to do it.

(2) A request that he, as NAIRO Chapter Chairman, circulate among Chapter members a petition to the Chicago Community Fund, urging it to withhold money from community institutions that discriminate. (Members would have been asked to sign as individuals; the petition would not have been transmitted as a Chapter document.)

The Board determined that, as a matter of policy, all Chapters of NAIRO are prohibited from making public statements on local issues without national Board approval; the Board does not have the information to make a decision on this specific issue, and permission cannot be granted. The use of the office of Chairman, directly or indirectly, as a means of effectuating such action must fall within this same prohibition.

(3) A request that the Chapter Chairman call together the executives of local intergroup relations agencies, to lay the groundwork for a coordinating council which, once independently established, would strive first to marshall support for state FEP legislation.

The Board determined, by consensus, that this would be improper. It places NAIRO in the role of urging action upon agencies, which is prohibited, and involves indirect stimulation of legislative activity, which is prohibited by the By-Laws. As an association of individuals, NAIRO cannot appropriately become involved in efforts to coordinate agency action; as a rule of thumb then, Chapters and their chairmen are similarly restricted.

The Board instructed the Executive Secretary to send to all Chapter chairmen and Regional chairmen copies of these inquiries and the Board rulings, and, as procedure, to do so in all similar instances in the future. (McGraw-Amerman, CARRIED).

The Board ruled that all such requests for policy determination must, in the future, be referred first to the Legal Counsel for his opinion before being brought to the Board (Amerman-Davis, CARRIED).

XIII. A resolution on employment of professionals (appended), adopted by the membership at the Business Meeting, was referred to the Committee on Professional Integrity, with instructions to report to the Board (at least on its progress) at the January meeting. (Yoshino-Rutledge, CARRIED)

XIV. It was determined that the next meeting of the Board would be held on Friday and Saturday, January 13th and 14th, in New York City. Altering an earlier pattern, the meeting will begin at 4 p.m. on Friday, continue through the evening and the following day, and end at 3 p.m. on Saturday.

The Spring meeting will be held in Detroit immediately preceding the Conference of Commissions Against Discrimination (late May or early June).

Determination of the September meeting place will await calculation by the National Office of Board members' travel distances to various possible sites, in order to select a central one.

XV. The President announced that he would present to the Board, in advance of the January meeting, a memorandum outlining possible reorganization of three committees: Professional Standards, Educational and Professional Training, and Economic Security. The Board will be asked to act on this at that meeting.

XVI. The Board ruled that the Conference Committee should not refund money for meal tickets purchased under the "Package" arrangement but not used (Routh-Binkley, CARRIED). While reasons for refund requests may be legitimate, the Board pointed out that the Conference Committee had -- on the basis of meal ticket sales -- made certain guarantees to the hotel and was forced, in at least one instance, to pay for many uneaten meals.

In brief discussion of Conference program and arrangements, there was unanimous praise for both, with commendation voted, by consensus, to all involved. Special mention was made of the discussion groups on the three afternoons, and general approval of this innovation was registered.

The Board, which had convened at 3 p.m., adjourned at 11:15 p.m.

Respectfully submitted,

VIRGINIA COFFEY
Secretary

JOHN V.P. LASSOE, JR.

LESSER RECOMMENDED THAT THE CONFERENCE BE LIMITED TO THREE FULL DAYS SO THAT MEMBERS MIGHT ATTEND THE NEW YORK WORLD'S FAIR ON SATURDAY AND SUNDAY. (MARTIN-GOLDABER) ADOPTED. THE BOARD ASKED MR. LESSER TO REPORT ON THE SUBSTANTIVE CONTENT OF THE CONFERENCE AT THE APRIL BOARD MEETING.

FRED ROUTH MADE THE REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, OUTLINING RECENT PROGRAM DEVELOPMENTS. HE REPORTED THAT PLANS WERE WELL SHAPED-UP FOR THE NAIRO INTERN PROGRAM AND THAT JOHN FEILD WOULD REPORT IN DETAIL THE NEXT DAY ON THIS PROGRAM. HE REPORTED ON THE STATUS OF THE WASHINGTON STUDY.

HE THANKED THE BOARD FOR THE LETTERS OF CONDOLENCE THE NAIRO OFFICE HAD RECEIVED FOLLOWING THE DEATH OF JANE LEEDS. HE REPORTED TO THE BOARD THAT HE HAD HIRED MRS. SCREENING AND ACCEPTING INTERN APPLICANTS. HE REPORTED THAT THE INSTITUTE OF HUMAN RELATIONS OF THE AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE WOULD CONDUCT THE INTERN SEMINAR AND THAT SESSIONS WOULD BE HELD IN WASHINGTON, D.C. AT THE POTOMAC INSTITUTE. "JOE" ALLEN, CONGRATULATED JOHN FEILD AND SAID THE ASSOCIATION AND THE BOARD WERE INDEBTED TO HIM FOR HIS FINE WORK ON THIS PROGRAM (MASON - CULBERSON) ADOPTED.

PRESIDENT ALLEN REPORTED ON A MEETING WHICH HE AND ED RUTLEDGE HAD WITH MR. YLVISAKER AND MR. SALTZMAN OF THE FORD FOUNDATION ON JANUARY 24TH, 1964. HIS REPORT CONTAINED FOUR POINTS: 1. NAIRO'S PROPOSALS NOW BEFORE THE FORD FOUNDATION ARE NOT DEAD; 2. THE NYU HUMAN RELATIONS CENTER HAS A TRAINING PROPOSAL BEFORE THE FORD FOUNDATION SOMEWHAT SIMILAR TO NAIRO'S; 3. THE QUESTION OF SUPPORTING A SECTARIAN TRAINING PROGRAM WAS NOT CONSIDERED IMPORTANT IN THE AJC-NAIRO TRAINING PROPOSAL FOR THE TRAINING WOULD BE NON-SECTARIAN; AND 4. THEY DID NOT DISCUSS NAIRO'S HOUSING PROPOSAL DURING THIS CONFERENCE WITH THE STAFF OF THE FOUNDATION.

JOHN FEILD REPORTED THAT THE U.S. CONFERENCE OF MAYORS HAD A MAJOR PROPOSAL BEFORE THE FORD FOUNDATION AND THAT THEY HOPED TO SET UP A COMMUNITY RELATIONS SERVICE TO AID THOSE COMMUNITIES DESIRING TO CREATE LOCAL MUNICIPAL INTERGROUP RELATIONS AGENCIES.

PRESIDENT ALLEN ASKED JOHN FEILD TO REVIEW ANY RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE CONFERENCE OF MAYORS PROPOSAL AND THAT OF NAIRO'S; HE ALSO ASKED ED RUTLEDGE, AS CHAIRMAN OF NAIRO'S COMMISSION ON HOUSING AND URBAN LIFE TO MAKE CONTACT WITH NAHRO TO ASCERTAIN IF THEY HAD PROPOSALS SIMILAR TO NAIRO'S HOUSING PROPOSAL BEFORE THE FORD FOUNDATION.

GEORGE SCHERMER REPORTED ON THE THINKING OF THE FISCAL DEVELOPMENT COM-

MITTEE; HE REMINDED THE BOARD THAT HE HAD PROPOSED "SERVICES" WHICH MIGHT BE MADE AVAILABLE TO COMMUNITIES, AT A FEE, WHICH HAD OR WERE CONSIDERING ESTABLISHING INTERGROUP RELATIONS AGENCIES. HE SAID THAT A "PACKAGE" MIGHT BE DEVELOPED CONSISTING OF 1. THE JOURNAL, 2. A SPECIAL NEWSLETTER, 3. A TECHNICAL INFORMATION SERVICE, 4. STAFF TRAINING OPPORTUNITIES, 5. BOARD MEMBER OR COMMISSIONER TRAINING OPPORTUNITIES. MR. SCHERMER SAID THAT SOME OF THIS MIGHT BE COVERED IN THE PROPOSAL OF THE CONFERENCE OF MAYORS BUT IT WAS STILL WORTH EXPLORING. GEORGE CULBERSON SUGGESTED THAT A PROSPECTUS BE DEVELOPED. THE BOARD THANKED MR. SCHERMER FOR HIS EFFORTS AND ASKED THAT HE FURTHER DEVELOP THESE PLANS (ALLEN - CULBERSON) ADOPTED.

LLOYD DAVIS REPORTED THAT A GROUP OF NAIRO MEMBERS IN CONNECTICUT HAD FOLLOWED ALL THE REQUIREMENTS FOR CHAPTER STATUS AND THAT HE WAS REQUESTING IT ON THEIR BEHALF. THE BOARD REVIEWED WHAT THE CONNECTICUT GROUP HAD DONE AND VOTED CHAPTER STATUS TO THEM AS THE CONNECTICUT STATE CHAPTER (CULBERSON - JONES) ADOPTED. NAIRO'S GENERAL COUNSEL WAS ASKED TO REVIEW THE CONNECTICUT BY-LAWS; MR. DAVIS SAID HE HOPED THAT PRESIDENT ALLEN MIGHT PRESENT THE CHAPTER CHARTER IN PERSON AT A PUBLIC MEETING; MR. ALLEN SAID HE WOULD BE GLAD TO, IF MUTUALLY CONVENIENT TIMES COULD BE WORKED OUT.

NAIRO-PRESIDENT ALLEN REPORTED ON A CONFERENCE HE HAD ATTENDED IN WASHINGTON AT WHICH PRESIDENT JOHNSON HAD ASKED SUPPORT FOR THE TAX-CUT BILL NOW BEFORE CONGRESS. MR. ALLEN EXPLAINED THAT HE WAS NOT ASKING FOR ACTION BUT THOUGHT THE INFORMATION MIGHT BE USEFUL TO NAIRO MEMBERS.

ACTING ON A RECOMMENDATION OF THE EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, WHICH HAD BEEN TABLED THE PREVIOUS NIGHT, THE BOARD VOTED TO ESTABLISH A LOCAL PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION TO STUDY HOW NAIRO MIGHT BEST SERVE THE NEEDS OF COMMUNITIES

AND LOCAL PUBLIC AGENCIES (CULBERSON - FEILD) ADOPTED. MR. ALLEN ASKED LOUIS MASON TO SERVE AS CHAIRMAN; MR. MASON ACCEPTED.

HAROLD HUNTON CHAIRMAN OF THE NEW YORK NAIRO CHAPTER, MADE A PROPOSAL TO THE BOARD WHICH HE HOPED WOULD ENABLE THE NEW YORK CHAPTER TO ENROLL 100 NEW MEMBERS. HE PROPOSED THAT THEY DEVELOP A PROGRAM TO SERVE LOCAL NEEDS AND UNDERWRITE THE NAIRO ANNUAL CONFERENCE. HE ASKED THAT A DIFFERENTIAL FEE BE LEVIED ON MEMBERS AND NON-MEMBERS FOR THE CONFERENCE; HE PROPOSED A MEMBERSHIP DRIVE DURING APRIL AND MAY TO GET THE 100 NEW MEMBERS. HE ASKED THAT $2 OF EACH MEMBERSHIP DUES THUS OBTAINED BE RETURNED TO THE NY CHAPTER (IF THEY DID NOT REACH 100, NO MONEY WOULD BE RETURNED TO THE CHAPTER); ALL OF THIS TO BE TRUE FOR NEW MEMBERS ONLY -- NOT FOR RENEWALS. THE BOARD APPROVED THE PLAN WITH MODIFICATIONS (CULBERSON - MASON) "THE NAIRO BOARD WILL GRANT TO THE NEW CHAPTER $250 IF THEY INCREASE THEIR MEMBERSHIP WITH 100 NEW MEMBERS BY JUNE 30TH, 1964." ADOPTED.

THE BOARD AUTHORIZED A $150 LOAN TO THE N.Y. CHAPTER TO BE PAID BACK BY THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE OPENING. (LEVENSON - MASON) ADOPTED.

THE BOARD AGREED TO APPOINT A COMMITTEE TO LOOK INTO DIFFERENT REGISTRATION FEES FOR MEMBERS AND NON-MEMBERS AT THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE (LEVENSON - MASON) ADOPTED.

GEORGE CULBERSON EXPRESSED APPRECIATION FOR THE ORIGINAL THINKING OF THE NY CHAPTER (CULBERSON - JONES) ADOPTED.

LOUIS MASON, JR. REPORTED ON THE REFERENDUM FIGHT GOING ON IN CALIFORNIA EXPLAINING THAT HE HAD HEARD FROM SEVERAL PERSONS ABOUT THE VICIOUSNESS OF THE OPPOSITION. HE SAID THAT THERE WAS NEED FOR ASSISTANCE BUT RECOGNIZED THAT NAIRO COULD NOT RENDER SUCH AND THAT HE FELT BADLY THAT THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE AGAINST DISCRIMINATION IN HOUSING COULD NOW OFFER ONLY EDUCATIONAL MATERIALS DUE TO THEIR TAX EXEMPT STATUS. THE PRESIDENT SAID HE WOULD WRITE THE TWO CALIFORNIA CHAPTER CHAIRMEN LETTING THEM KNOW OF THE BOARD'S CONCERN.

THE MINUTES OF THE TWO PREVIOUS MEETINGS, HELD IN CLEVELAND JUST PRIOR TO AND JUST AFTER THE ANNUAL MEETING, WERE APPROVED (MASON - ROBISON) ADOPTED.

THE DIRECTOR WAS ASKED TO INCLUDE THE DATES OF THE FUTURE BOARD MEETINGS IN THE NEWSLETTER.

MINUTES

NAIRO BOARD OF DIRECTORS
21 APRIL 1964

STOUFFER'S INN
LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY

The Board Meeting was convened by the President, Alexander J. Allen, at 10:00 A.M. The President welcomed the Board members and visitors to the meeting saying that such meetings are part of a plan to move the Board Meetings about so that they are more easily accessible to members who live in the various areas of the country.

Mansir Tydings, Executive Director of the Louisville Human Relations Commission, welcomed the Board to his city on behalf of the Mayor and the Commission on Human Relations. Mr. Tydings pointed out that Louisville had a public accommodations ordinance, that progress was being made generally in the intergroup relations field, and that Louisville had been given the All American City awards for its progress.

The minutes of the last meeting of the Board were approved, except on Page 5, Kenneth C. Jones was substituted for Alexander J. Allen as the person who made the motion commending George Schermer. (Jones-Feild)

The Board accepted with deep regrets the resignation of Irving Goldaber as Treasurer and asked that negotiations be undertaken to find a suitable successor. (Feild-Rilling)

The Treasurer's Report was made by Fred Routh in the absence of the Treasurer. The Treasurer's Report was accepted. (Jones-Rilling)

The Board discussed the report of the Philadelphia Chapter of NAIRO on the staff situation of the Philadelphia Commission on Human Relations. It was moved (Rilling-Jones) that the President and Executive Director be authorized to appoint a Board Member or Officer to cooperate with the Philadelphia Chapter in looking into the situation. APPROVED. The President asked the President-Elect, K. C. Jones, Jr., to accept this responsibility; Mr. Jones agreed but said he would want to check it out with his agency.

It was moved (Feild-Warring) that up to $1,200 a year might be spent for part-time extra secretarial help to the Executive Director (separate from special help secured for the Intern Training Program). APPROVED.

The Executive Director reported that negotiations were under way with David Hunter of the Princeton Institute of Government, to utilize a report they were preparing on the dynamics of passing the civil rights bill as a special issue of the JOURNAL OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS. He said that the project would be underwritten with sufficient funds to pay for the printing of the JOURNAL. It was moved (Feild-Rilling) that negotiations be continued and consummated and that safeguards, used in the special Issue on "School Integration and Segregation in the North," be complied with. APPROVED.

The Executive Director reported on a letter received from the Chicago Chapter complaining about the lack of communications from the national office. A lively discussion followed and it was agreed that the Newsletter should be published more regularly, hopefully monthly.

A petition for Chapter Status was received from the Kentucky State Chapter; after an examination of their proceedings which found them in compliance with NAIRO By-Laws, it was moved (Warring-McDermott) that the Kentucky State Chapter be granted a Charter. APPROVED.

The President, Joe Allen, reported that the Connecticut State Chapter had received their Charter in a special ceremony which he had attended. He reported that Lloyd Davis, as Chairman, was giving real leadership to the Chapter.

The Executive Director reported that through negotiations he had been successful in raising salary levels in three new municipal agencies and one new state agency. The Board commended Mr. Routh for his efforts.

The Board accepted with regrets (Feild-Rilling) the resignation of Louis Mason as Chairman of the NAIRO Commission on Local Public Agencies and Services. The President appointed Mr. Benjamin Collier of Patterson, N. J. to succeed Mr. Mason.

John Field reported on the Intern Training Program, saying that phase one (getting the first class of Interns on the job) was completed. He reported that a detailed report to Dr. Herman Long, Chairman of NAIRO's Career Service Board was forthcoming; he said that it was hoped that two fifteen-week, once-a-week seminars might be developed for the Interns; he reported that the Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Foundation has authorized funds for the second class of Interns; he stated that NAIRO must secure full-time temporary professional staff assistance to carry out the functions he had performed for round one of the intern program; he said that one Intern, Edith Barksdale, had spoken to the Board of the Foundation and had been well received; he said that the Foundation Board was well impressed with this Program and needed to be kept informed. The Board commended Mr. Feild for his report and tha thanked him for his efforts on behalf of the Association. (Jones-McDermott)

The Executive Director asked for authorization to employ a full-time temporary staff person to assist him in administering round two of the Intern Program, pointing out that the Foundation would give financial assistance for this purpose. It was moved (Feild-Jones) that such authorization be given the Executive Director. APPROVED.

The Board commended (Rilling-Warring) Galen Martin and his Ad Hoc Committee for developing the special report "A Memorandum to Municipalities: GUIDELINES FOR MUNICIPAL HUMAN RELATIONS COMMITTEES."

It was agreed, without vote or motion, that the Intern Newsletter should be distributed among the NAIRO Board.

The President stated that Agenda Item #18, a Report on the Status of NAIRO's Ford Foundation Proposals, to be given by Mr. Rutledge would be held over until the June Meeting of the Board. He also stated that Agenda Item #23 would be held over for the June meeting since it had not been possible for Mr. Joseph Monserrat to be present to report for the new Public Information Committee.

The Board accepted with regret (Kanatz-Warring) the resignation of Margaret Fisher as Chairman of NAIRO's Publications Committee and the President said he would look for a replacement among three persons he had in mind.

The Board discussed at length the Report of the Conference Planning Committee, read by Fred Routh in Saal Lesser's absence. The Board commended Mr. Lesser (Jones-Rilling) and his committee for the work thus far done. The Board changed the Conference theme to "THE DEEPENING CRISIS IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS," asked that a major session be devoted to "Intergroup Relations and the War on Poverty," and modified the list of speakers to be invited. The Executive Director was instructed to write Mr. Lesser accordingly and to call him after he had had a chance to receive the letter.

The Board Meeting was adjourned at 3:50 P.M., after the date and site of the next Board Meeting was agreed upon: New York City, June 30th, 1964.

N A I R O NEWSLETTER

February, 1958 Issue

NAIRO COMMISSION REVAMPED

Emphasis on member participation marks the form and function adopted for NAIRO's Commissions by the Board of Directors at its quarterly meeting in Chicago last month. And addition of a new Commission on Interreligious Relations boosts to six the number of such bodies functioning within NAIRO.

Briefly, each Commission will be centered for a year in a selected city, where a nucleus of NAIRO members especially interested in its subject area will provide leadership and guidance. Members elsewhere will be invited to affiliate and participate as correspondents, but responsibility for the annual Commission report and yearly discussion topics (see below) will rest with the city-centered core.

In 1958, Commission centers and chairmen will be:

MANPOWER UTILIZATION - Cleveland (chairman pending)

EDUCATION - Chicago (chairman pending)

HOUSING AND FAMILY LIFE - Philadelphia (chairman: JOHN MC DERMOTT, National Conference of Christians and Jews)

OTHER CIVIL RIGHTS - Washington, D.C. (chairman: BENJAMIN SEGAL, Director, Trade Union Program on Civil Liberties and Rights)

NATURE, SCOPE AND THEORY - Detroit (chairman: JOSEPH FAUMAN, Jewish Community Council)

INTERRELIGIOUS RELATIONS - New York City (Dr. ROY MC CORKEL, Commission on Religious Organizations, National Conference of Christians and Jews).

Commissions will have two old functions, one new. As in days of yore, they will each prepare an annual report, although the new city-core plan is designed to encourage more of a group process, with less emphasis on individual articles. Similarly, the city-centered core will give better group guidance to the Commission representative on the Conference Program Committee. (The Commissions' representatives and the CP Committee will be localized in New York this year).

New function for the Commissions lies in the charge to develop key discussion topics in each Commission's are of interest, these to be circulated to local NAIRO groups for their earnest consideration - and for possible national attention at the Annual Conference at year's end.

A JOURNAL IS BORN

Reports of NAIRO's six Commissions (staggered every two months) will form the basis for our new JOURNAL OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS. This bi-monthly publication will go to all NAIRO members without charge but will cost everyone else $5 or $6 per year. It will be mimeographed at first, moving into print at a later date.

Commission chairmen (aided by their respective city-centered cores) will serve as editors of the issue dealing with their special competence. Overall editorship will be exercised by NAIRO's Publications Committee. First issue, due next month, will concern itself with Manpower Utilization and will be edited by LOUIS MASON (Pittsburgh Commission on Human Relations), chairman of that Commission for 1957.

PERSONNEL REGISTRY RESTRICTED

After due deliberation, the Board has voted to limit the services of NAIRO's Personnel Registry to members only. This decision came after a count revealed only 4 NAIRO members among 125 registrants currently carried.

Each member who asks to be listed with the Registry will receive prompt mail notice of each job opening posted with NAIRO. (It is up to him to apply directly to the agency at that point; as in the past, NAIRO will neither screen those receiving job notices nor screen those wishing to apply).

Members will not be charged for this service (nor will agencies). Non-members have been invited to join NAIRO or, at least, now subscribe to the NAIRO Reporter (which carries listings from the Registry each month).

One exception to NAIRO's passive role in placement was approved by the Board: active solicitation of jobs for the eight young interns who - upon completion of their year's training this Spring - will be available for employment elsewhere. Resumes for all eight will shortly be available. (The remaining ten interns taking part in NAIRO's first internship year are scheduled to remain with their training agencies as permanent employees).

NAIRO DEPARTMENT CHAIRMEN NAMED

Unlike the Commission picture, the Departmental scene remains relatively unchanged after the 4-month review (by the Sub-Committee on Program Development) and the Board's consideration. Only major action recommended and voted was the abolition of the Department of Research Services, its former members to be absorbed by the five remaining Departments (listed here with their 1958 chairmen):

LOCAL PRIVATE	-	LLOYD DAVIS, Catholic Interracial Council, Chicago
LOCAL PUBLIC	-	BURTON GORDIN, Commission on Human Relations, Philadelphia
STATE PUBLIC	-	(chairman pending)
NATIONAL PRIVATE	-	(chairman pending)
FEDERAL SERVICES	-	(chairman pending)

As in the past, each NAIRO member will automatically affiliate with a Department, depending on his agency's function and geographic area of operation.

The Department promotes exchange of information on developments, methods, and techniques relating to professional function within that type of agency; through its representative on the Conference Program Committee, it also helps select the subjects deliberated at each Annual Conference. Some Departments have in the past circulated regular Newsletters; at least one has sponsored a study of agency characteristics within its purview (i.e., the Amerman-Smith study - and the Amerman-Barnes resurvey-of Local Public Agencies).

OTHER BOARD ELECTIONS AND APPOINTMENTS

The Board elected three of its members to serve with the officers on NAIRO's Executive Committee: THELMA BABBITT, American Friends Service Committee, Philadelphia; JOHN G. FEILD, Michigan Fair Employment Practices Commission, Detroit; and JOHN HOPE, II, Race Relations Department, AMA, Fisk University, Nashville.

THELMA BABBITT was also re-elected as chairman of NAIRO's Membership Committee, and LOUIS MASON was chosen as chairman of the 1958 Conference Committee.

Although a few other Committee chairmanships are still pending, most have been filled:

RESOURCES AND PLANNING - Louis A. Radelet, National Conference of Christians and Jews, New York City

PROFESSIONAL STANDARDS - Grace Marr, American Nurses Association, New York City

RESOLUTIONS - Samuel Spiegler, National Community Relations Advisory Council, New York City

FINANCE - George Culberson, Commission on Human Relations, Pittsburgh

CONFERENCE PROGRAM - Irving Goldaber, Commission on Intergroup Relations, New York City

And, to the on-going assignment of the Committee on Professional Standards, the Board has added the entire question of Job Security for professional workers.

BY-LAWS CHANGE PROPOSED

The Board adopted a recommendation to the NAIRO Membership that our By-Laws be changed to permit election of eight (rather than four) Regional Chairmen. The feeling was expressed that the existing regions were too large and that local NAIRO groups would benefit by greater attention from an overall regional person who could travel easily to their cities.

Pending approval of the change, which must be voted by a majority of the members present at the annual NAIRO business meeting in Pittsburgh next November, the Board approved selection of Regional "Representatives" to serve as interim chairmen (without Board post or powers). These are:

NORTH CENTRAL REGION - GARNET GUILD, American Friends Service Committee, Des Moines, Iowa

SOUTH CENTRAL REGION - WADE MACKIE, American Friends Service Committee, Baton Rouge, La.

NORTHWESTERN REGION - LOUISE BLACKHAM, Civic Unity Committee, Seattle, Washington

Regions of the present Regional Chairmen (all of whom are now Board members) were reduced, as follows:

NORTHEAST (from East) - EDWARD RUTLEDGE, State Commission Against Discrimination, New York City

GREAT LAKES (from North) - FRANK W. FAGER, Board of Community Relations, Toledo, Ohio

MIDDLE SOUTH (from South) - JOHN HOPE, II

SOUTHWEST (from West) - JOHN A. BUGGS, County Committee on Human Relations, Los Angeles, California

Function of the Regional Chairmen (and Regional Representatives) was firmly redefined as follows: to organize and stimulate local NAIRO groups, to aid them in their programming, to coordinate their regional activities, and to serve as liaison between them and the Board of Directors.

LOCAL NAIRO GROUPS DISCUSSED

The sometimes-confusing question of what constitutes a "local NAIRO group" also received new clarification from the Board, as in the following:

> Local NAIRO groups are not "chapters" or "branches" in the formal sense but simply gathering of NAIRO members in given cities or areas; each group is open to, and automatically includes, all NAIRO members in its area; no one can belong to a local NAIRO group except as a member of national NAIRO but local NAIRO groups may invite non-members to take part in their activities; and existing (non-NAIRO) local organizations of professionals may not affiliate formally with NAIRO except insofar as their individual members become members of NAIRO and come together on that basis (i.e., NAIRO continues to be an association of individuals only).

"PEOPLE HAVE ASKED ME"

We might as well start a regular column for our members' requests for special information.....

(1) What can be recommended in the way of graded materials (elementary and secondary) in intergroup relations, especially from commercial publishers? ./.

(2) What research has been done on the attitudes of ethnic groups toward professional workers (teachers, caseworkers, etc.) of another ethnic group, as opposed to their attitudes toward "one of their own?"

(3) What community group has carried on educational activities vis-a-vis open occupancy in housing (1 and 2 family home ownership) in a neighborhood only remotely "challenged" by minority group move-ins - i.e., a neighborhood where change is inevitable but not foreseeable?

(4) Where can one get help in organizing a private, independent citizens committee on minority group problems?

(5) Where can one obtain up-to-date reports on intergroup relations research in progress?

(6) Who issue annotated bibliographies in intergroup relations?

(7) What is the attitude of the professional staff person if his Board unwittingly invites a Communist sympathizer to join? if that person accepts?

NEWS FROM PHILADELPHIA NAIRO

Quoth CHARLOTTE EPSTEIN (Greenfield Center for Human Relations, University of Pennsylvania) Philadelphia NAIRO chairman:

"On January 31, we had the last of three sessions planned to provide in-service professional education for the membership. The first session dealt with the Problem of the Changing Neighborhood, the second with Intergroup Tensions Among Teenagers, and the third with Education: The Long-Term Approach. What we tried to do here was to provide opportunity for exchange of knowledge and opinions among members and also between members and other individuals engaged in related work. These subjects were selected after the membership was polled to get their ideas on content and procedure for an in-service education program. The series was so well received, that we are in process of planning to continue it."

...AND NEWS FROM CHICAGO NAIRO

"Chicago NAIRO has sponsored three luncheon meetings since September 1, to which NAIRO members, and professional staff from human relations agencies including community organizations were invited. The purpose of these get-togethers, is to afford opportunity for closer communication between agencies and staffs, and to explore and discuss together special projects being carried on by individual agencies, and problems of common concern. Approximately fifty persons have attended each luncheon session.

SOME FINANCIAL FACTS OF LIFE

Considerable time at the quarterly Board meeting was devoted to finances - and especially to the Budget for 1958. ITEM ONE: The membership goal was again set at a net gain of 100, and the campaign was entrusted to NAIRO's Membership Committee. New members in 1958 to date: 1 3. ITEM TWO: A budget goal of $2,500 in internship pledges was set for 1958, with the Finance Committee named to secure them. Pledges in hand to date: $800. ITEM THREE: A special committee will be named to help increase the number of individual ($3) and bulk ($2 a piece) subscriptions to the NAIRO Reporter. (Members are being asked to contribute lists of potential subscribers, and three of you responded to last month's plea in these pages). ITEM FOUR: A Special Funds Drive for $2,500 in 1958 was approved, and the Resources and Planning Committee was asked to consider ways and means of raising this. It was suggested, for example, that local NAIRO groups be asked to undertake modest fund-raising projects in the various major cities.

The budget for 1958 anticipates total expenditures of $31,261. In order to provide a modest surplus for use just after NAIRO's foundation grants expire (Spring, 1959), Treasurer GEORGE CULBERSON has set a goal for receipts of $39,470. The Board formally and unanimously adopted this budget.

INTERNSHIP SEMINAR PLANS

Dates of the NAIRO Internship Seminar have been shifted from March until May or possibly June. Reason: unavailability of the right seminar or workshop leader for the original (March) dates. Location will be Chicago - International House or the (Frank Lloyd Wright) Robie House.

The Board approved opening the Internship Seminar to a limited number (7-9) of non-interns: Junior staff members whose agencies are willing to help share Seminar costs. This share was set at $250 per person for the ten-day session; the Board voted automatic scholarships of $100, however, reducing the 1958 tuition, room and board fee to $150. The Educational and Professional Training Committee will draft criteria for selection of these non-interns; further information may be obtained in the meantime from the NAIRO office (i.e., JOHN LASSOE).

A LONGER CONFERENCE?

Tenor of returns of Conference Evaluation sheets has led the Board to recommend extension of the Annual Conference from three to four days. (Everyone noted that there was insufficient time for sessions, informal talk, etc., and several members suggested such an extension). Since crowded hotel bookings make it impossible to extend the 1958 (Pittsburgh) Conference, the question will be put to the membership at the Annual Business Meeting. (NAIRO Conferences now run from Wednesday morning, usually 10 A.M., through Friday luncheon, usually until 2:30 P.M. Proposal calls for beginning on Tuesday morning, this to take effect in 1959).

THIRD NAIRO RESEARCH CONFERENCE

The Board gave unanimous approval to the idea of a Third NAIRO Conference on Research in Intergroup Relations and asked Dr. DON HAGER to continue his investigation of both the idea and the potential sources of subsidy. Thoughts on either question should be communicated to DON HAGER, Chairman, Department of Sociology and Social Welfare, Los Angeles State College, 5280 Gravois Avenue, Los Angeles 32, California.

(The Field Foundation gave NAIRO grants for the first two Research Conferences, both of which were held in Chicago some years ago under HELEN AMERMAN's leadership).

NEW YORK NAIRO ACTIVITY

First step in the activation of a local New York NAIRO is the appointment (by Regional Chairman EDWARD RUTLEDGE) of an acting chairman for the city: SYLVIA KUSIEL, New York State Commission Against Discrimination. Regional hopes are for groups in Buffalo, Newark, Boston, and Hartford-New Haven as well.

AGENCIES APPLY FOR INTERNSHIP GRANTS

As this issue of the Newsletter went to press, applications for 1958-1959 internship grants had been received from fifteen agencies - with definite indications from seven others. Competition for the $2,500 grants, which are to be matched by the recipient agency, will be somewhat keen since only 11-14 grants are expected to be available this year. Choice of agencies will be made by the sponsoring foundations.

FIRST NAIRO INTERNSHIP SEMINAR HELD IN CHICAGO

NAIRO made both organizational and professional history in Chicago last month when fifteen of its seventeen interns and three other junior professionals (the latter enrolled on a fee-paying basis) gathered at International House for our first Internship Seminar. Reports from all levels rate it as a great success and suggest that it has considerable meaning for both NAIRO and the intergroup relations field.

Dr. ROBERT JOHNSON, NCCJ Research Director, provided superb and exciting leadership for the first half of the twelve-day meeting; an able seminar steering committee guided the final week's program. NAIRO Executive Secretary JOHN LASSOE served as overall coordinator.

Seminar topics - each good for several hours of intensive discussion - included:

- Approaches and Techniques
- Roles and Relationships of the Private Agencies
- Ethics and Intergroup Relations
- The South Today
- Social Work and Intergroup Relations
- The Agency and the Volunteer: Participation vs. Manipulation
- The Professional and His Agency
- Nature of the Intergroup Relations Professional
- Religious Conflict
- Quotas in Housing: Justifiable?
- Politics and Intergroup Relations
- Goals of Intergroup Relations
- Problems of In-Migration in Northern Cities
- Role of the Public Agency

Speakers and resource persons included many NAIRO members and other professionals:

FRANCIS MC PEEK, Chicago Commission on Human Relations; WILLARD JOHNSON, Chicago Regional Office, NCCJ: FREDERICK ROUTH, Southern Regional Council; MARSHALL BRAGDON, Mayor's Friendly Relations Committee, Cincinnati; EDWARD HOWDEN, Council for Civic Unity, San Francisco; K.C. JONES, Jr., Cleveland Urban League; MARGARET MADDEN, Chicago Commission on Human Relations; JOHN FEILD, Michigan FEPC: NAIRO President ARNOLD ARONSON, National Community Relations Advisory Council; John Willard, Chicago Office, American Friends Service Committee; Stephen Thiermann, Northern California AFSC; Paget Alves, Urban League of Greater New York; Edward Holmgren, Chicago Urban League; and Everett Cope, South Chicago Community Center.

Five organized forays into the outside world provided breaks during the twelve days: a briefing by the staff of the Chicago Commission on Human Relations (FRITZ POLLARD, ELEANOR WRIGHT, GEORGE ROBERTS, BERT SCHLOSS, ELEANOR DUNGAN, DOUGLAS TURNER et al); a luncheon at the Chicago Urban League (EDWIN C. BERRY, RAY LEWIS, and others talked with the group); attendance at the Gala Benefit of the Catholic Interracial Council (LLOYD DAVIS pulling the strings); luncheon with the Chicago NAIRO group; and a special dinner for interns, their supervisors, and guests at a downtown restaurant.

Incidentally, the three (non-intern) junior professionals who received partial scholarships to attend the Seminar were: Bob Blackburn, Philadelphia NCCJ; Joseph Dressel, Chicago NCCJ; and K.C. JONES, Jr., Cleveland Urban League.

NOTE: The first-year evaluation of the internship program - now in the works - will also analyze this Seminar. It will be distributed to the membership sometime before the NAIRO Conference in November.

NEW NAIRO APPOINTMENTS ANNOUNCED

President ARNOLD ARONSON has named ABBOTT ROSEN (Director, Midwest Regional Office, Anti-Defamation League) as chairman of NAIRO's Education Commission. And Dr. DAN DODSON (Director, Center for Field Services, New York University) has agreed to chair the Educational and Professional Training Committee during the second year of the Internship Program.

LOCAL NAIRO GROUPS AT WORK

More than 40 professionals crowded SYLVIA KUSIEL's (N.Y. SCAD) apartment on June 3 for the first meeting of the New York City NAIRO. After a buffet supper, the group entered into lively discussion on the topic "Integration vs. Non-Discrimination in Housing," sparked by Charles Abrams (SCAD Chairman), WILL MASLOW (American Jewish Congress), and TED LESKES (American Jewish Committee). Edward Lewis (Urban League of Greater New York) presided.

NAIRO's first gathering in Southern Connecticut (Conference on Human Values in New Haven on June 13) drew more than 100 professionals and lay leaders from the area. Speakers and resource leaders included Dr. DAN DODSON; Dr. JOHN DEAN (Cornell University); OSCAR COHEN (Anti-Defamation League, New York); and FRANK SIMPSON (Connecticut Civil Rights Commission). WILLIAM STEWART (Human Relations Adviser, Mayor of New Haven) is NAIRO chairman and served as Conference Coordinator.

Detroit and Michigan NAIRO held a one-day meeting at Wayne University's new McGregor Conference Center on June 21. Regional Director FRANK FAGER (Toledo Board of Community Relations) and JOHN LASSOE attended the small but excellent meeting. BEULAH WHITBY (Detroit Commission on Community Relations) is the group's chairman.

INTERNS ON THE MOVE

As the first year's internships near an end, many of the interns are preparing to move into more permanent positions: PAUL ERTEL, Jr. (intern at Cincinnati's Mayor's Friendly Relations Committee) will become Executive Director of Fellowship House in that city. Mrs. Kathryn Brisbane (intern at the Atlanta Urban League) will spend one year in India with her husband, a Fulbright Fellow (on leave from his post as Professor of History at Morehouse College). CHARLES PATTERSON (intern at the Council for Civic Unity, San Francisco) will shortly take up his duties as administrator of the Fund for the Republic's Trade Union Program, moving across the bay to Berkeley. CARRIE MISNER (intern at American Friends Service Committee, San Francisco) will become Assistant Program Director of the Reading (Penn.) YWCA.

STILL AVAILABLE FOR E*M*P*L*O*Y*M*E*N*T (Please take notice!) are: Joan Berry, Urban League of Greater New York; Mrs. Wylda Brewster Cowles, Chelsea Community Council, New York City; Machion Garrison, Southern Regional Council, Atlanta; L. Millard Hunt, Philadelphia Fellowship Commission; Stanley Leibner, American Jewish Committee, Miami; and NELSON WILLIAMS, San Francisco Urban League.

Moving into permanent posts in their training agencies are: Augustus Baxter, Friends Neighborhood Guild, Philadelphia; Herbert Chabot, American Jewish Congress; Mrs. Olivia Filerman, Chicago Urban League; Ralph King, Boston NCCJ; ALBERT NELLUM, Catholic Interracial Council of Chicago; Philip Geissal, Kansas City YMCA: and Bernard Zvi Sobel, Anti-Defamation League, Newark.

(After such a list of names, it seems like a good time to explain that - in the NEWSLETTER - members' names always appear in CAPS and non-members' names in lower case. Discrimination? Yup!)

YOUR EXECUTIVE SECRETARY: ALSO ON THE MOVE

Since the last issue of the NEWSLETTER, JOHN LASSOE has represented you on visits to Cincinnati, Chicago, Denver, San Francisco, Detroit, and Cleveland. Several of the cities were covered on a second round of internship visits -part of NAIRO's administrative role in this program. Denver, however, was a NAIRO stop with a full schedule (beautifully planned by HELEN BURKE, Commission on Human Relations) of visits with intergroup relations professionals - including SHELDON STEINHAUSER (Regional Office, Anti-Defamation League). And Detroit was scheduled - as reported above - because of the one-day NAIRO Conference.

Most recently, you were represented by your Executive Secretary and a host of NAIRO members at the 49th Annual NAACP Convention in Cleveland. This was also an opportunity to meet with one of the newest internship agencies - the Cleveland Baptist Association - and with Cleveland's Intergroup Relations Council (staff body).

Following four weeks' vacation in August, LASSOE will represent you at the First National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice (Chicago, August 29-31). Again, a large number of NAIRO members are scheduled to participate, many of them in featured roles.

INTERNSHIP NEWS: SECOND ROUND

A fourteenth agency has been added to the list of those planning to train interns during 1958-1959, and applications are currently being accepted by:

South Chicago Community Center
9135 Brandon Avenue
Chicago 17, Illinois

-m o r e -

Interns have already been named by three of the participating agencies, Chicago Urban League (Ronald Stewart); Stiles Hall YMCA, Berkeley (John A. Martin, Jr.); and Philadelphia Commission on Human Relations (Mrs. EMILY KIMBALL YOUNG, formerly with United Neighbors Association in that city).

1958 NAIRO CONFERENCE

Plans for our 1958 Conference - Pittsburgh, November 19, 20, 21 - are almost complete, and the tentative program should be in members' hands by mid-September. Conference Program Committee Chairman IRVING GOLDABER (N.Y.C. Commission on Intergroup Relations) is still accepting, even welcoming suggestions for the informal clinics during the Conference!

In the near future, your mail will also bring a request for suggestions from SAMUEL SPIEGLER (National Community Relations Advisory Council), chairman of our Resolutions Committee. Plans call for a "Statement of Concern" reflecting our collective opinion on the most pressing issues facing us at Conference time. When the letter arrives, R.S.V.P!

MORE SUMMER READING

Look forward to Volume I, No. 2 of the Journal of Intergroup Relations, an issue compiled by the NAIRO Commission on Housing and Family Life (chairman: JOHN MC DERMOTT, Philadelphia NCCJ). Incidentally, did any member fail to receive Volume I, No. 1 - the issue on Manpower Utilization ?? Please advise us if you did. (And credit Marilyn Feild, wife of former NAIRO President JOHN FEILD, for the striking cover for our newest publication!)

NAIRO's Committee on Professional Standards will also be in touch with you - asking you to respond thoughtfully to a questionnaire on the components of The Compleat Intergroup Relations Professional. Chairman GRACE MARR (American Nurses Association) warns that this will not be an easy one to answer but it will be important to NAIRO and our profession! Much hard work is being put into the questionnaire by a Survey Subcommittee consisting of GARDA BOWMAN (N.Y. SCAD), RHETTA ARTER (N.Y.C. Commission on Intergroup Relations), WALTER CHAMBERS (Mayor's Commission on Group Relations, Newark), and GRACE MARR.

HITHER AND YON WITH OUR MEMBERS

ALEXANDER BROOKS, formerly with the Encampment for Citizenship, is - and has been for some time, it seems - Professor of Law at Rutgers Law School, Newark, New Jersey..... LOUIS ZIMMERMAN, formerly with N.Y. SCAD, has joined the expanding staff of the N.Y.C. Commission on Intergroup Relations.....Our Secretary, SIDNEY LAWRENCE (Jewish Community Relations Bureau, Kansas City), is on the West Coast this summer - on the staff of the Encampment for Citizenship at Berkeley.....Those eagerly awaiting the report of the Commission on Race and Housing (DAVIS MC ENTIRE, Research Director) will be pleased to hear that early fall publication is anticipated.....DONALD HOUSTON, formerly with the Denver Commission on Human Relations, will be taking up a new post in Berkeley this fall.

- m o r e -

IN AND ON THE PRESS

Another issue of SHOP TALK (organ of the Department of Local Private Services) is off the press, containing - among many other items - some interesting comments on the question of professionalism in intergroup relations. CHARLES LIVERMORE (N.Y. SCAD) and WARREN LEHMAN (Chicago Commission on Human Relations) have good thoughts to offer on the subject .... The June 21st issue of Saturday Review carried an interesting review by our own FRANK LOESCHER (African-American Institute); it dealt with three recent books: "Racial Discrimination and Private Education" by Arthur S. Miller (University of North Carolina Press), "Separate and Unequal" by Louis Harlan (University of North Carolina Press), and "Racial Factors and Urban Law Enforcement" by William M. Kephart (University of Pennsylvania Press).

Our mail just brought an interesting research report "prepared originally for the Commission on Race and Housing": "New Housing for Negroes: Recent Experience" by William Goldner (Bureau of Business and Economic Research, University of California, Berkeley 4, California) .... For those of you interested in developments in Africa these days, your Executive Secretary offers an unsolicited recommendation: a quarterly, "Africa South," published in South Africa and available here on a subscription basis. A note to Mrs. S. Pauley, 320 West 87th Street, New York City, should bring a sample copy.

NEWSLETTER - SPECIAL SUPPLEMENT

INFORMATION NEEDED!!

NAIRO HAS RECEIVED (ANOTHER) REQUEST FOR INFORMATION THAT DOES NOT SEEM TO BE READILY AVAILABLE -- AT LEAST IN OUR OFFICE. CAN ANYONE OFFER ANY GUIDANCE ON THE FOLLOWING:

(1) HAVE INTERGROUP RELATIONS (OR OTHER) AGENCIES BEEN SUCCESSFUL IN PERSUADING THE COMMUNITY CHEST OR FUND IN ANY COMMUNITY TO REQUIRE THAT ORGANIZATIONS RECEIVING ITS SUPPORT MAKE THEIR SERVICES AVAILABLE ON A NON-DISCRIMINATORY BASIS? WHERE SUCH EFFORTS WERE SUCCESSFUL, WHAT EXCEPTIONS (IF ANY) WERE MADE FOR SECTARIAN AGENCIES? WHAT IS THE HISTORY OF UNSUCCESSFUL ATTEMPTS?

(2) WHAT ATTEMPTS HAVE BEEN MADE TO MAKE THE LABOR DEPARTMENT'S APPRENTICESHIP TRAINING AVAILABLE ON A NON-DISCRIMINATORY BASIS IN GIVEN COMMUNITIES OR STATES? WHAT SUCCESS (OR FAILURE) HAVE INTERGROUP RELATIONS AGENCIES EXPERIENCED IN DEALING WITH EMPLOYERS ON THIS MATTER? LABOR UNIONS?

(3) WHAT SUCCESS HAVE INTERGROUP RELATIONS AGENCIES HAD IN ENDING THE SEGREGATION OF WHITE AND NEGRO PRISONERS IN PENAL INSTITUTIONS? IS THERE ANY EVIDENCE TO DISPUTE THE ARGUMENT OF SOME AUTHORITIES THAT THIS IS JUSTIFIABLE SINCE IT "KEEPS DOWN TROUBLE?"

- AND REPEATING ONE OF THE QUESTIONS POSED IN THE FEBRUARY NEWSLETTER:

(4) WHAT HAS BEEN THE SUCCESS OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS AGENCIES' EDUCATIONAL ACTIVITIES VIS-A-VIS OPEN OCCUPANCY IN HOUSING (1 AND 2-FAMILY HOMES) IN A NEIGHBORHOOD ONLY REMOTELY CONCERNED WITH MINORITY GROUP MOVE-INS, I.E., A NEIGHBORHOOD WHERE SUCH CHANGE IS INEVITABLE BUT NOT IMMEDIATELY FORESEEABLE? AND ARE SUCH EDUCATIONAL ACTIVITIES DESIRABLE?

* * * *

IF ANY MEMBER CAN OFFER ANY GUIDANCE ON ANY OF THESE QUESTIONS, REPLIES WILL BE MUCH APPRECIATED BY YOUR EXECUTIVE SECRETARY, JOHN LASSOE. INFORMATION WILL BE FORWARDED TO THE INTERESTED PARTIES -- AND THE ANSWERS WILL BE ON TAP FOR USE WITH FUTURE INQUIRIES. PLEASE -- AND THANK YOU!

N A I R O NEWSLETTER

February-March, 1959

LOCAL NAIRO GROUPS: WHAT, WHY, AND WHO?

Local groups - NAIRO's Board has said - are especially important adjuncts of the total program for professional growth. They offer professionals a chance to doff agency identification and come together as individuals for discussion of questions of common professional concern, questions that may transcend immediate community problems or matters of interagency coordination but are no less important for the intergroup relations worker.

An interagency staff council, strictly defined, would on the other hand draw the same people as agency representatives, brought together to exchange information on agency programs or to plan joint action to cope with specific situations.

Most communities probably need both an interagency staff council and a local NAIRO group, and an increasing number of cities -- most recently, Minneapolis-St. Paul and Pittsburgh -- have formed two separate bodies.

LOOK FOR FURTHER CLARIFICATION of the role of local NAIRO groups after the March 6-7 (Chicago) meeting of the Board of Directors. In the meantime, as a sample of what local NAIRO groups might be discussing around the country, the National Office has prepared a list of questions, which appear as the last two pages of this Newsletter.

And, please, if there is any discussion of these questions in any professional group -- formal or informal, NAIRO or otherwise -- send the National Office some sort of report or summary. There are no easy or immediate answers, and we need much pooled thought.

SAN JUAN OR BUST!

Down in lovely San Juan (temperature at this writing: 80 degrees), employees of the SAN JUAN INTERCONTINENTAL HOTEL are busy getting ready for you!!!! They are expecting you on October 13, 14, 15 and 16 (Tuesday through Friday) and for as long before and after as you can stay. The occasion? NAIRO's Thirteenth Annual Conference -- but you knew that all along....

The Conference Arrangements Committee (Chairman: JOSEPH MONSERRAT, Migration Division, Commonwealth of Puerto Rico Labor Department) has a mailing on its way to you now. And the Conference Program Committee (Chairman: LLOYD DAVIS, Catholic Interracial Council, Chicago) is hard at work planning the kind of schedule that will make you both cerebrate and celebrate.

WE SHOULDN'T HAVE TO SAY IT BUT....NAIRO's Board never saw this Conference as an idyllic junket, pleasant as the site may be. There was overwhelming consensus that the problems of adjustment by Puerto Rican newcomers to mainland urban life required all the understanding and professional acumen that intergroup workers could muster. And here is an opportunity to develop just that!!

OUR MEMBERS: HITHER AND YON

SAAL LESSER, formerly N.Y. Metropolitan Area Educational Director of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, has become Executive Director of the Encampment for Citizenship, New York City.

SAMUEL SIMMONS, formerly on the Michigan FEPC staff, is the new Executive Secretary of the Michigan Labor Mediation Board, Detroit.

And ROBERT GREENE, also of the Michigan FEPC staff, is on leave of absence to spend thirteen weeks as a Lasker Fellow at Brandeis University, Waltham, Mass. (Announced through NAIRO some months ago, these fellowships provide an ideal opportunity for those actively involved in civil rights and civil liberties to withdraw for some concentrated and unstructured thought, study, and discussion.)

Another winner of one of the coveted Lasker Fellowships is IRENE LAMBERT, policewoman on the staff of the Juvenile Aid Bureau, New York City.

ROY MC CORKEL, formerly Director of the Commission on Interreligious Relations of the NCCJ (and chairman of NAIRO's Commission of the same name), has left -- as of March 1 -- to work with the American Friends Service Committee.

WILLIAM JACKSON has become Executive Director of the Laura Lee Fellowship House in Danville, Illinois. He was formerly Executive Director of the Bradfield Community Center in Lima, Ohio.

In Community (monthly publication of Friendship House, Chicago), January issue, please note an excellent article by DENNIS CLARK (Commission on Human Relations, Philadelphia). Entitled "Big Lie About Negro Crime In Philadelphia," it is an excellent answer to bigots' blasts about disproportionately high minority group crime rates in one Northern urban center.

And in the same issue of Community, note too a review by WARREN LEHMAN (Chicago Commission on Human Relations), who is becoming a regular contributor.

CHARLES ABRAMS has resigned as chairman of the New York State Commission Against Discrimination. He was not reappointed by Governor Rockefeller.

NAIRO'S MEMBERSHIP

Each year at this time, we cut away those who are dues-delinquent. This is always a painful process, especially since it cuts into our total membership figures. You will be pleased to learn, however, that we still stand with a respectable membership of 4 5 4 -- and that we welcome as new members the following:

HERBERT L. CHABOT, American Jewish Congress, New York City; NISSEN N. GROSS, Anti-Defamation League, Chicago, Illinois; ROCKWOOD JENKINS, Lincoln Center, Poughkeepsie, New York; RALPH M. GOGLIA, Commission on Civil Rights, West Haven, Connecticut; Mrs. EUGENE GOULD, Mayor's Commission on Human Relations, Minneapolis, Minnesota; LEONARD JEFFRIES, STUDENT MEMBER, Rutgers University, Newark, New Jersey; RICHARD SHAPIRO, William Penn Center, Fallsington, Pennsylvania; Sister PATTIE ELLIS, C.W.C., Board of Community Relations, Buffalo, New York; Mrs. HENRY KRAMER, St. Paul Council of Human Relations, St. Paul, Minnesota; and from the F E P C in River Rouge, Michigan,

Mrs. BOBBIE BLACKMON, DANIEL NEUSOM, Mrs. ALICE DOIG, HARRY GOLDEN, ALFRED MITCHELL, and GUS RATZENBERGER; The Rev. W.C. COWART, Georgia Council on Human Relations, Atlanta, Georgia; M. LEO BOHANON, Urban League, St. Louis, Missouri; EDITH FEJER, STUDENT MEMBER, Oak Park, Illinois; Mrs. ESTHER SMITH, Riverside Neighborhood Assembly, New York City; Mrs. NIDA E. THOMAS, Englewood Urban League, Englewood, New Jersey; ERWIN L. FEIERTAG, STUDENT MEMBER, Council for Civic Unity, San Francisco, Calif.; HAROLD GOLDBLATT, Commission on Intergroup Relations, New York City; KENT LARRABEE, Phila. Fellowship Commission; ROLAND M. SAWYER, United Steelworkers, Pittsburgh.

CORRECTION, PLEASE !!

On intergroup relations' Fleet Street, faces get particularly red when faced with a journalistic "boffo," and we have one this month:

ELMER BROCK (Delaware NCCJ) was not able to accept chairmanship of the Local Private Services Department, contrary to an (incorrect) announcement in the last Newsletter.

YOUR PERIPATETIC EXECUTIVE SECRETARY

JOHN LASSOE represented NAIRO in ten cities during the past month. In each, one or more NAIRO members took special pains to see that his trip was not a total loss; in fact, each stop was a resounding success!! Kudos to the following, if you please:

- CHICAGO: President MARGARET GARRITY (President's Committee on Gov't. Contracts)
- MILWAUKEE: CORNEFF TAYLOR (Commission on Human Rights)
- CINCINNATI: MARSHALL BRIGDON (Mayor's Friendly Relations Committee)
- SEATTLE: LOUISE BLACKHAM (Civic Unity Committee)
- SAN FRANCISCO: HELEN AMERMAN (Council for Civic Unity)
- LOS ANGELES: JOHN BUGGS (County Commission on Human Relations); MILTON SENN (ADL)
- ST. LOUIS: MYRON SCHWARTZ (Jewish Community Relations Council)
- DETROIT: FRANCES COUSENS (Michigan F E P C)
- CLEVELAND: K.C. JONES (Cleveland Urban League)
- ERIE, PENN.: HOWARD MC KINNEY (Community Relations Commission)

Among seventeen speaking engagements, your Executive Secretary addressed the Annual Meeting of the Seattle Civic Unity Committee, and a meeting of Detroit NAIRO.

In recent travels, a few interesting developments of import to NAIRO have been noted: (1) increasing professional identification, (2) new prestige and growing recognition for NAIRO, (3) growing interest in professional standards and internship training, (4) new life for local NAIRO groups, (5) a decline in interest and membership among agency Board members, (6) new pressure for NAIRO to take over certain clearinghouse functions, (7) concern about the role of the NAIRO Departments, and (8) marked growth in membership and support among public agency professionals.

Scheduled for March and April are trips to Cleveland, Chicago, Milwaukee, Cincinnati, Atlanta, Miami, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington. By April's end, a total of twenty-four cities will have been visited in NAIRO's name.

NAIRO NEWSLETTER - 4

MORE NEWS NOTES FROM ALL OVER

Los Angeles County has advanced its Committee on Human Relations to the status of Commission on Human Relations (JOHN BUGGS, Executive Director). There is a four-man professional staff, with more expected.

The Annual Conference Banquet speech of MARION WRIGHT (Southern Regional Council) was inserted in the Congressional Record by Senator Paul Douglas (D, Illinois).

DAVID SCULL (Virginia Council on Human Relations) is involved in a case now before the U.S. Supreme Court. At issue is his right to refuse to answer questions about his (alleged) membership in the NAACP, AFSC, ADA, ACLU, and Human Relations Council. He is represented by Joseph Rauh in this action. (See SOUTHERN PATRIOT, January, 1959).

And CARL BRADEN (Southern Conference Educational Fund) has been indicted for contempt of Congress for refusal to answer questions regarding his activities and those of SCEF on behalf of integration, before the House Un-American Activities Committee. (Cf. also SOUTHERN PATRIOT, January, 1959).

The 1959 Annual Conference of the National Urban League will be held in Washington, D.C., on September 8 - 10, 1959.

FEP Commissions may well be established this year in Ohio, California, and Illinois, if legislation now before the respective State Legislatures passes (as is expected). As presently drafted, these laws would continue municipal FEPC's in Ohio, supersede those in California (notably the San Francisco Commission on Equal Employment Opportunity, EDWARD HOWDEN, Executive Secretary).

Dr. DAN DODSON (Center for Human Relations, New York University) spoke recently before a concurrent session of the Council on Social Work Education Conference in Philadelphia. Topic:"Relationship of Intergroup Relations to the Practice and Teaching of Social Work." Session chairman was JOHN SLAWSON (American Jewish Committee), and one panelist was BEULAH WHITBY (Detroit Commission on Community Relations).

Headlines have been garnered recently by HERMAN LONG (Race Relations Department, American Missionary Association, Congregational Christian Churches) with his report on racial inclusiveness in Congregational Christian churches, "Fellowship For Whom?"

You will find many NAIRO members listed in reports issued recently covering meetings that took place last Spring: "Respective Roles and Responsibilities of Private and Public Agencies in Advancing Community Relations Objectives," National Community Relations Advisory Council (February, 1958, consultation in Philadelphia), and "Religion and Freedom," The Fund for the Republic (May, 1958, consultation in New York City). Both command special attention !!!

LLOYD DAVIS (Catholic Interracial Council, Chicago) had an article - "Catholics and Eight Foundations" - in the January 17th issue of America. It abstracts data gathered by him for his recent (Loyola University) M A thesis.

SOME 1958 CONFERENCE STATISTICS

FRANCES COUSENS (Michigan Fair Employment Practices Commission, Detroit) has performed another labor of love, producing this time the statistical breakdown on percentage of agency personnel attending the last NAIRO Conference. Much in evidence at Pittsburgh were:

100% of Territorial Public Agency Employees (Professional)
5.7% of Federal Agency Employees
7.3% of National Private Agency Employees
24.1% of Regional Private Agency Employees
32.4% of State Public Agency Employees
62.3% of Local Public Agency Employees (!!!)
20.4% of Local Private Agency Employees

These percentages are based on total employment in each category (see DIRECTORY OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS AGENCIES WITH PAID STAFF, unpublished), not on NAIRO membership. Total attendance was 301 (approximately 22% of the 1400 professionals employed in our field).

REGIONAL CHAIRMEN NAMED

As your letterhead (and Membership Rosters , shortly to be published) will tell you, your President has named the Regional Chairmen for 1959, all now functioning in their areas and as members of the Board of Directors:

NORTHEAST: IRVING GOLDABER (Commission on Intergroup Relations, New York City)

GREAT LAKES: A. ABBOTT ROSEN (Midwest Regional Office, Anti-Defamation League, Chicago, Illinois)

MIDDLE SOUTH: JOHN Y. YOSHINO (President's Committee on Government Contracts, Washington, D.C.)

SOUTHEAST: HASKELL LAZERE (American Jewish Congress, Miami, Florida)

SOUTH CENTRAL: WADE MACKIE (American Friends Service Committee, Baton Rouge, Louisiana)

NORTHWEST: LOUISE BLACKHAM (Civic Unity Committee, Seattle, Washington)

NORTH CENTRAL: LOUIS H. ERVIN (Minneapolis FEPC, Minneapolis, Minnesota)

SOUTHWEST: JOHN A. BUGGS (Los Angeles County Commission on Human Relations, Los Angeles, California)

Also named recently to a responsible post in NAIRO was:

DEPARTMENT OF LOCAL PUBLIC SERVICES: HOWARD MC KINNEY (Community Relations Commission, Erie, Pennsylvania)

MORE ON THE PUTNAM LETTER

Mention of the half-page Putnam Letter newspaper advertisements in last month's Newsletter proved to be quite timely. In the past two months, the advertisement has appeared in these additional newspapers: Washington Star, Christian Science Monitor, Wall Street Journal, Philadelphia Inquirer, and Cleveland Plain Dealer.

According to columnist John Temple Graves, the Putnam Letter will shortly be published in newspapers in Chicago, Detroit, St. Louis, Denver, Dallas, Portland ("where race hate festers in hiding, I have learned on two visits"), Salt Lake City, Minneapolis ("where the South is least understood"), and Los Angeles. The same source reports that the Putnam Letter fund has received $25,000 from all parts of the South and many areas beyond; the Committee is headed by James E. Simpson, "associated now with Alabama's ex-Gov. Frank Dixon, Lieut. Gov. Albert Boutwell, and ex-Lieut. Gov. Hardwich." (All quotes are Mr. Graves'.)

Those who have not seen the Putnam Letter may secure single copies by sending a stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request to: James E. Simpson, 317 North 20th Street, Birmingham, Alabama.

SOME PROFESSIONAL CONCERNS

There follow some suggested questions, suitable for discussion by a local NAIRO group or by any other formal or informal professional gathering in the intergroup relations field.

THE PROFESSION

What are the characteristics of a good intergroup relations professional?

What is the role and function of the professional vis-a-vis his agency's lay leadership?

Should intergroup relations professionals be accredited? By what standards? By what machinery?

What areas of interprofessional cooperation (between intergroup relations and allied fields) should be developed or explored? What machinery is needed?

Along what program lines should NAIRO develop? What services or activities are needed and appropriate?

SUBSTANTIVE: SUGGESTED BY THE NAIRO COMMISSIONS

What is the role of the public agency in religious conflict situations? the role of the non-sectarian private agency?

Are racial quotas in housing necessary to achieve true integration? Are they ever justifiable, defensible? Can an intergroup relations professional ever advocate or support them?

What should be the elements of a good intergroup relations professional training program? What is the training role of the human relations centers? What should they teach?

What are the guidance, training and apprenticeship factors affecting minority group employment?

What can be done to eliminate de facto segregated schools (those that are exclusively or predominantly one-group schools by virtue of residential segregation)?

What should be the role - nationally and locally - of the (federal) Commission on Civil Rights?

SUBSTANTIVE: LOOKING AHEAD

What concepts, methods and techniques developed in interracial relations are applicable in interreligious relations? Which are not?

- m o r e -

SOME PROFESSIONAL CONCERNS - 2

What are the goals of intergroup relations with regard to the American Indian? Do we need different approaches? different concepts? different techniques?

What concepts, methods and techniques developed in urban intergroup relations are applicable in suburbia? Which are not?

What is the role of the intergroup relations professional in situations where there is a disproportionately high crime rate among minority group members?

What constitutes constructive use of intergroup conflict? What are guiding principles? and what is our role as intergroup relations professionals?

What kind of city would we, as intergroup relations professionals, plan? What urban pattern would best advance our objectives?

Do civil rights laws ever infringe on civil liberties?

What is the role of religious institutions in interracial relations? How can intergroup relations professionals foster this activity?

Can we, as intergroup relations professionals, accept self-segregation -- e.g. a religious minority that chooses to segregate itself residentially? Or are we obliged to try to achieve integration?

What are the ethics of intergroup relations? What code should we adopt, if any?

What are the overall goals of intergroup relations? What is our "common cause?" our common end?

TO CINCINNATI IN 1960!!!

NAIRO's Board has voted to accept the 1960 Conference bid tendered by Cincinnati intergroup professionals on behalf of their agencies. The 14th Annual Conference will be held at the Netherland Hilton Hotel on Tuesday through Friday, November 15-18, 1960.

VIRGINIA COFFEY (Mayor's Friendly Relations Committee, which includes such NAIRO stalwarts as: MARSHALL BRAGDON (MFRC), CHARLES POSNER (JCRC), and IRA GISSEN (AJC). Non-NAIRO members among the hosts include: Joseph Hall and William Decatur (Urban League), and Malcolm Chandler (NCCJ).

The 1960 choice was a difficult one, with friendly and attractive invitations from Des Moines (MALCOLM HIGGINS, Mayor's Commission on Human Rights), Miami (DEAN G. EPLEY, Department of Human Relations, University of Miami), and Detroit (RICHARD V. MARKS, Commission on Community Relations). The "Queen City" won out because it is located centrally in terms of NAIRO member concentration (an especially important factor in a year between two distant conferences) and because it is seen as the gateway to the South.

1959 ELECTIONS BY MAIL BALLOT

At its March 6-7 meeting, the Board also voted to elect officers and directors this year by mail ballot. This is authorized by the By-Laws (Article X, Section 8).

The Nominating Committee (RICHARD MARKS, chairman) was instructed to mail its slate to the membership in early September and to then solicit additional nominations. (Any three members in good standing may nominate a person for any post, by signed petition with the candidate's written consent.) A final ballot -- containing the Committee's nominations and any others submitted -- will be sent to the membership in late September. Results will be announced at the San Juan meeting.

A NEW BOARD MEMBER

Mrs. FRANCES R. COUSENS (Research Director, Michigan FEPC) was elected to the Board in March to fill - until the next election - a vacancy created by the resignation of SAMUEL DANIELS (formerly Maryland Commission on Interracial Problems and Relations). Mrs. COUSENS was also elected to replace Mr. DANIELS as chairman of the Membership Committee.

Ex-chairman DANIELS' last official act was an "each one get one" membership campaign letter to every NAIRO member. Chairman COUSENS' first official act was a warm "come back to NAIRO" letter to all who had dropped from membership in the past few years. These appeals, combined with normal growth, have boosted NAIRO membership to 491, an increase of 37 since the last Newsletter.

We will hit 500 -- at last -- this month!!!

A PRINTED "JOURNAL OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS"

NAIRO's JOURNAL OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS, now approaching the end of its first year and volume, will convert from mimeographed to printed form in early September. At its June 5-6 meeting, the Board voted to launch a printed quarterly when the popular JOURNAL moves into Volume II. The first issue will focus on Manpower Utilization and will be largely a product of the Commission of the same name (CHESTER GRAY, Ohio Bureau of Unemployment Compensation, chairman). The second or Winter issue will center on Housing and Family Life (HAROLD LETT, chairman).

SAMUEL SPIEGLER (National Community Relations Advisory Council), now managing editor of the NAIRO Reporter, was selected by the Board as JOURNAL editor. The nine-year-old Reporter will suspend publication after one more issue, its content to be then incorporated in the new JOURNAL in the form of periodic articles.

Meanwhile, back at the old JOURNAL, the Interreligious Relations issue (product of a Commission chaired by ROY MC CORKEL, American Friends Service Committee) was mailed to the membership in June. The Civil Rights issue will appear in mid-summer as the last issue (#5) of Volume I; a Commission headed by BENJAMIN SEGAL (Education Director, I.U.E., AFL-CIO) will be reporting on its survey of civil rights in the nation's capital: "Washington Desegregation -- Ten Years After."

We note with profound sadness the death on June 9th of a good friend and distinguished member of NAIRO: JOHN PEEBLES DEAN, Associate Professor of Sociology at Cornell University. Known to many in our field for his long and active participation in NAIRO conferences and committees, his name is familiar to all intergroup relations workers through his co-authorship of A Manual of Intergroup Relations.

Educated at Dartmouth College and Columbia University (Ph.D., 1944), Dean served two years on the staff of the Federal Public Housing Authority before beginning his teaching career. He was on the faculty of Bucknell College, Queens College, and The New School for Social Research prior to his appointment in 1948 as Field Director of the Studies of Intergroup Relations at Cornell. Those field studies, which brought him into close working contact with intergroup relations agencies in a number of communities, led eventually to the writing - with ALEX ROSEN - of the well-known Manual. Dean's other books included Home Ownership: Is It Sound?, The Book of Houses, and Desegregation. His research touched almost every intergroup relations concern.

"John Dean had a sensitive and inquiring mind and a humane spirit. His death represents a very great loss to social science and to the community at large." (Gordon Streib, Cornell University). To the intergroup relations community, this is especially true. . . . . .

OTHER BOARD ACTIONS

A new Commission on Research Services was established in March to provide an opportunity for continuing contact among those primarily engaged in agency or academic research. The action followed an appeal from a group of public agency researchers for a specific "home" in the NAIRO structure, something they had lacked since abolition of the Research Services Department in 1958.

LLOYD DAVIS (Catholic Interracial Council, Chicago) was named as NAIRO's registered agent in Illinois, succeeding Frederick Pollard, Jr. (Chicago Commission on Human Relations). Such an agent is required under the terms of NAIRO's incorporation in that state.

A special interdepartmental committee was established to investigate the possibility of greater interagency exchange of information, especially in terms of services that national private agencies might be prepared to offer to state and local public bodies, and to independent local private agencies. DAVID DANZIG (American Jewish Committee, New York) will head the committee, composed temporarily of the five NAIRO Department chairmen.

Reiterating a long-standing if implicit policy, the Board took the unanimous stand in March that NAIRO cannot be a member of any agency or organization.

To permit wider participation in the drafting of the annual Statement of Concern, this year's Resolutions Committee (MARSHALL BRAGDON, Mayor's Friendly Relations Committee, Cincinnati, chairman) will circulate a first draft a few months in advance of the San Juan meeting. Mail comments will be incorporated in a second draft, to be discussed and voted upon at the Annual Meeting. Members are urged to submit suggestions for the first draft now !!!!

After due study, the Board declined to recommend adoption of a By-Laws amendment providing for election - rather than appointment - of Regional Chairmen. The change had been proposed at the 1958 Annual Meeting, and the membership referred it to the Board for study and recommendation. Board consensus was that the special service required of Regional Chairmen suggests that they are better selected than elected.

Careful consideration was given at both the March and June meetings to a proposed By-Laws amendment formalizing the role and relationship of local NAIRO groups. Consensus was that such an amendment should be recommended to the membership for adoption at the next Annual Meeting, and the Rev. H. BENJAMIN SISSEL (Department of Social Education & Action, Presbyterian Church) was asked to head a committee to draft the Board's proposal after soliciting suggestions from existing local groups.

MORE NEW CHAIRMEN NAMED

To head the Department of Local Private Services, VIRGIL BORDER (Area Director, National Conference of Christians and Jews, St. Louis, Missouri).

To head the new Commission on Research Services, GEORGE GRIER (State Commission Against Discrimination, New York).

NATIONAL INTERNSHIP SEMINAR

An eight-day seminar for NAIRO interns was held at International House, New York City, during the week of June 6-13. Fourteen interns and ten supervisors were in attendance for all or some of the sessions; one non-intern (Helen Maynor, National Congress of American Indians, Washington, D.C.) also registered for the week.

The Seminar followed close on the heels of the June 5-6 NAIRO Board meeting, and the first session was a joint intern-supervisor-Board discussion on "The Scope of Intergroup Relations," led by FREDERICK B. ROUTH (Michigan FEPC). An intern-supervisor evaluation of the total Internship Program followed.

Dr. DAN DODSON (New York University Center for Human Relations) keynoted the Seminar, challenging the interns with his comments on the monitoring of intergroup relations conflict. Roger Shaw (New York office, NCCJ) led workshop planning sessions, and various resource people were invited in for subsequent discussions: WILLIAM VALENTINE (Housing Division, SCAD), RAPHAEL O. LEWIS (Employment Division, Chicago Urban League), SAAL LESSER (Encampment for Citizenship), Edward Lewis (Urban League of Greater New York), Rabbi Arthur Gilbert (Anti-Defamation League), and Dr. H. HARRY GILES (New York University School of Education).

SAN JUAN, 1959

A major item on the June Board meeting agenda was the approval of the 1959 Conference agenda. A complete outline will be mailed to the membership by the Conference Program Committee (LLOYD DAVIS, Catholic Interracial Council, Chicago, chairman), but it can be recorded here that the four-day session will be full and fun -- adding to the usual business sessions, major addresses, commission and department meetings, clinics, and informal exchange, such added attractions as a swimming party, a government reception, Island tours, sandy beaches, and sunshine.

Noting both the unusual interest in the Conference and its special setting, the Board also adopted the following policy: All persons attending the 1959 Conference must be

NAIRO members in good standing or must pay a $15 Conference Registration Fee. Spouses and blood relatives are exempted, and local (Island) residents will be charged only the customary Registration Fee of $3. The Board noted that Conference registrants will enjoy special room rates at the San Juan International (including the week before the meeting and the week after) and may also be offered special air travel rates and other bonus attractions. This seemed to warrant the unprecedented requirement of paid membership or an equivalent registration fee. And there is a membership category (Active, Associate, Student) for everyone!!

Look for another mailing -- very soon -- from the Conference Arrangements Committee (JOSEPH MONSERRAT, Migration Division, Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, chairman). It will contain all of the latest information on reservations, travel, special events, etc.

AUTHORIZING A LONG LOOK AT NAIRO'S FUTURE

The Board gave approval in June to a dramatic and far-reaching proposal developed by the Resources and Planning Committee at its June 4 meeting. Financial angels willing, it will shape NAIRO's deliberations for the year ahead.

(1) A Leadership Conference in late Fall, 1959, that will project the next decade's major trends and developments affecting intergroup relations -- and will attempt to analyze implications for the field in terms of needs, directions, organization, and gaps.

(2) After circulation of Conference reports to NAIRO membership, and after study by NAIRO Committees, a Leadership Conference (late Spring, 1960) on the future role and function of NAIRO.

(3) Circulation of the second Leadership Conference reports, and further study by NAIRO Committees, leading to the 1960 Annual Conference (Cincinnati) which would be largely devoted to (a) reaching consensus on the role of NAIRO and (b) reaching consensus on the functional structure of NAIRO -- all in the light of expected trends and developments in the field. Consideration of professional standards and possible professional accreditation would be a major item.

The Resources and Planning Committee was directed to draw up a comprehensive proposal for submission to foundations. Meanwhile, the Committee on Professional Standards (GEORGE SCHERMER, Philadelphia Commission on Human Relations, chairman) was asked to refine and develop a separate proposal for a staffed project to define standards for intergroup relatinns work, leading possibly and eventually to accreditation procedures.

NATIONAL INTERNSHIP PROGRAM, 1959-1960

With administrative grants in hand -- $15,000 from an anonymous benefactor and $5,000 (renewal) from McGregor Fund of Detroit -- and with the Board decision to continue for at least one more year NAIRO's on-the-job professional training program, the search is now on for foundation training grants -- and for agencies willing and able to take part in the program. Foundations are being approached to provide full or half grants

($5,000 or $2,500), and agencies have been invited to participate — matching grants from their own funds, approaching local foundations for support or even attaching voluntarily their junior staff members to the program.

A mailing inviting expressions of interest went to the NAIRO membership in April, but it is not too late for an agency to register its desire to participate!!

The St. Louis Urban League (M. LEO BCHANON, Executive Director) received a training grant from the Field Foundation and becomes the first official participant in the 1959-1960 program.

MORE NEWS OF NAIRO MEMBERS

JULIA ABRAHAMSON is in print this month with her new book, "A Neighborhood Finds Itself" (Harper & Brothers, New York 1959: $5.00). This is the story of the Hyde Park-Kenwood community on Chicago's South Side — and of the Hyde Park-Kenwood Community Conference, of which Mrs. ABRAHAMSON was for six years Executive Director.

GLEN E. MANSFIELD, long-time Executive Secretary of the Washington State Board Against Discrimination, will soon surrender his administrative and educational duties to devote full time to investigation and conciliation of complaints, under a new title.

CLARENCE SENIOR (Chief, Migration Division, Commonwealth of Puerto Rico Department of Labor) is also in print, this time with "Land Reform and Democracy" (University of Florida Press, Gainesville, 1959: $6.75). It is a case study of a large-scale agrarian experiment — the distribution of land to about 30,000 peasant families in Mexico.

MARY HOWARD (Assistant Director, New Jersey Regional Office, NCCJ) became Mrs. Robert Cadwell on June 14th. She will remain on the NCCJ staff.

ALEXANDER J. ALLEN is on a year's leave of absence from the Pittsburgh Urban League, of which he is Executive Secretary, to work on a special project at the National Urban League office in New York.

EDWARD N. HODGES, III (Michigan FEPC) had an article in the April 1st issue of the Michigan Education Journal: "FEPC and the Teaching Profession," an interesting analysis of several teacher-discrimination cases brought under the Michigan law.

GARDA BOWMAN (New York SCAD) is finally recovering from a seven-month struggle with a broken pelvis and subsequent complications (the troublesome "staph" germ). She returns to work on July 1st.

Elspeth (Mrs. MARSHALL) BRAGDON is in print with another Maine-based juvenile, "One To Make Ready" (Viking Press, New York, 1959: $2.75). Like her husband, the long-time executive director of the Cincinnati Mayor's Friendly Relations Committee, she is a transplanted New Englander.

A unanimous U.S. Supreme Court decision on May 4th reversed a Virginia Supreme Court contempt conviction of DAVID H. ROBERTA CHURCH (Minority Groups Consultant, U.S. Department of Labor) was featured in the May issue of Ebony Magazine.

STERLING TUCKER (Washington, D.C., Urban League) emerged as the top speaker in a forensic meet of the D.C. Junior Chamber of Commerce held here recently. He will go to New York in June to compete for national honors.

DAVID DANZIG (American Jewish Committee, New York City) is back from a five-week business-and-pleasure trip to Europe.

The March issue of the Merrill-Palmer Quarterly of Behavior and Development carried an article by CHARLES LIVERMORE (New York SCAD) based on his speech, "Integration vs. Anti-Discrimination," at the 1958 NAIRO Conference.

Belated kudos to ELEANOR RYDER, ROBERT MAST, and LOUIS MASON, JR (all of Pittsburgh Commission on Human Relations) for their tremendous job in editing and preparing the 1958 Conference Proceedings, mailed to members in February.

And kudos to MASON, MAST, and HERBERT AURBACH for the excellent study, "Racial Practices in Pittsburgh Hospitals," released this month by the Commission on Human Relations there.

In print this month, too, is H. HARRY GILES' The Integrated Classroom -- a comprehensive, practical survey of the dynamics and anatomy of integration today (Basic Books, Inc., New York, 1959: $5.00). Dr. GILES is professor of education at New York University; he was the founder of the NYU Center for Human Relations Studies.

INSIDE NAIRO: REGIONS, LOCAL GROUPS, DEPARTMENTS

Very belatedly: The Twin Cities NAIRO is being headed these days by ERNEST COOPER (St. Paul Urban League), chairman; Mrs. VIOLA KANATZ (Minnesota-Dakotas Regional Office, NCCJ), vice-chairman; and DAN JACOBOWSKI (St. Paul FEPC), secretary-treasurer.

A second Departmental newsletter has been released by the Department of Local Public Services (HOWARD MC KINNEY, Erie Community Relations Commission, chairman).

A. ABBOTT ROSEN (Midwest Regional Office, ADL) has resigned as chairman of NAIRO's Commission on Education but will continue as Great Lakes Regional Director. A Great Lakes NAIRO Conference is in the offing, probably in Chicago in the Fall.

LOUIS H. ERVIN (Minneapolis FEPC), North Central Regional Director, reports postponement until Fall of a regional conference originally scheduled for June 5-6. Among other things, it turned out that most of the National NAIRO leadership was planning to be in New York at the Board meeting.

Philadelphia NAIRO has just concluded its annual seminar program for intergroup relations professionals. Local group chairman FLORENCE KITE (Committee on Race Relations, DAN ANTHONY (Director, Mayor's Commission on Group Relations, City Hall, Newark 2, New Jersey) writes that copies of the monumental survey, "Newark - A City In Transition" (unabridged, or in a one-volume condensation), are available from his office.

Fisk University will hold its 16th Annual Race Relations Institute from June 29 through July 11. Isn't this the granddaddy of them all?? HERMAN LONG (Race Relations Dept., AMA) will again direct the seminar.

The Council of Churches and Christian Education of Maryland-Delaware (Mildred Atkinson, Director, Christian Social Relations, 14 West Madison Street, Baltimore 1, Maryland) is making good use of small stickers with the legend: "As your customer, I welcome being served by any qualified person regardless of race, creed or color." People are asked to affix these when paying bills or writing to stores, banks, etc.

Both Orlando and West Palm Beach, Florida, have established bi-racial Mayor's Community Relations Committees. Efforts are underway to secure appointment of similar official bodies in El Paso, Texas, and Charlotte, North Carolina.

Office-hunting this month in New York City are the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing (FRANCES LEVENSON & MARGARET FISHER) and the Committee on Civil Rights in Manhattan (EDNA MERSON). Both were formerly housed with the American Jewish Committee, which moves to its new building in August. Both organizations will be grateful for space suggestions.

NAIRO had a modest hand in the preparation of "Intergroup Relations in the United States: A Compilation of Source Materials and Service Organizations," published recently by the National Council of Women of the United States (New York, 1959, $1).

The Merrill-Palmer School in Detroit (RICHARD H. KERCKHOFF, Leader, Program in Community Organization and Development) announces an experimental summer workshop on "Rearing Children in the Racially Changing Neighborhood," to be held July 13-24. It will be for parents and young children currently living in racially changing neighborhoods, largely nearby Highland Park.

'Tis reported that Miss Aimee Isgrig (once Assistant Director of the now-defunct University of Chicago Human Relations Center, and a former NAIRO member) will shortly become executive director of the Illinois Commission on Human Rights.

From the Community Tensions Center, Springfield (Mass.) College (HANS SPIEGEL, Director), comes an interesting report on the Center's "Seminar on Community Conflicts Arising From Religious Controversy Related to the Public Schools," held in Atlantic City last February. Many NAIRO members were among the planners and participants.

AN INTRIGUING PROPOSAL: EDITORIAL

In the Spring (March 1959) issue of the AAUP Bulletin (publication of the American Association of University Professors) appears an article by Francis C. Pray entitled "Let's Invest in Scholarship." It offers a suggestion that might be of interest to progressive professionals and advanced agencies:

Briefly, it is proposed that an amount equal to a set percentage of each faculty member's salary be set aside by the university for that member's use in supporting scholarly endeavor and for professional improvement. The article mentions four per cent, and suggests that its use be confined to (a) travel "for professional improvement" -- to participate by the reading of a paper, membership on a panel, or service as an officer in the meeting of an educational or professional association; (b) purchase of equipment or materials for scholarly endeavor or research; and (c) personal services of a professional or clerical nature not otherwise available through the regular department staff.

In practice, an assistant professor whose base salary is - let us say - $6,000 would have available for such use a sum of $240 for that year. This would be over and above his regular salary. Approval of each request for use of these funds would be granted by a committee of three faculty members, elected by each school, division, etc.

Translated into intergroup agency terms, such a plan would permit professionals to attend NAIRO Conferences and meetings, conduct modest independent research projects, prepare articles for publication, purchase books and other publications related to their work, and take university and other courses for professional development.

Approval of the specific project requests could rest with a staff committee (in larger agencies) or with a Board committee. Funds unused by an individual would revert to the agency at the end of the year. Since project approval would not be automatic, the committee would also have an opportunity to guide individual staff members in their professional development and to encourage new avenues of research or professional involvement.

And, taking the four per cent figure as a guide, is $240 a year not a modest investment in the professional growth of a practitioner in whom the agency is already sinking $6,000???

YOUR PERIPATETIC EXECUTIVE SECRETARY

Following the January-February Western swing, JOHN LASSOE visited seven cities in the Midwest and South. In Chicago, there was a Finance Committee meeting, the March 6-7 Board meeting, a party for the Board at the home of ELEANOR DUNGAN (Commission on Human Relations), and various appointments with members and others.

Milwaukee provided an opportunity to lunch with VIRGINIA HUEBNER (Wisconsin FEP Division) and Dr. RUDOLPH MORRIS (Marquette University). At CORNEFF TAYLOR's invitation, Lassoe also spoke to the Milwaukee Commission on Human Rights.

In Cincinnati, Lassoe met with the Intergroup Agency Council (local professionals) to discuss the 1960 Conference -- and also addressed the annual meeting of the Mayor's Friendly Relations Committee. Atlanta provided an opportunity for long talks with President-elect FREDERICK ROUTH and for a meeting with local professionals. Miami brought a meeting with local professionals (CAIRO, or Community ...etc.) and talks with NAIRO intern JANE LEEDS and supervisor WILLIAM K. WILLIAMS (Dade County Council on Community Relations).

Middle South Regional Director JOHN YOSHINO (President's Committee on Government Contracts) and JOHN G. FEILD (Office of U.S. Senator Hart) arranged a full week of meetings and interviews in Washington, D.C. Meetings with local professionals (including a luncheon of the D.C. Area Conference on Intergroup Relations) were supplemented by talks with Assistant Attorney General Wilson White, White House aide Frederick Morrow, and Lyndon Johnson's executive assistant. To top off the visit, DAVID SAWYER (Commissioners' Council on Human Relations) arranged for Lassoe to receive the key to the city from Commissioner McLaughlin; it was accepted on behalf of all U.S. intergroup relations professionals. And it is a beauty!

Lassoe spent one day in Philadelphia, meeting with interns and other professionals -- after addressing the Philadelphia NAIRO group. The week before, he had attended a four-day Trainers' Consultation in Princeton, New Jersey, sponsored by the Council of National Organizations, Adult Education Association.

NEW MEMBERS GALORE !!!

NAIRO's Office Secretary and right arm, FRANKYE BROWN, is experimenting this month with something new and hopefully useful: sheets of stickers carrying the names of (a) new members -- you paste these in the margin or on the back of pages, and (b) old members who have changed addresses -- you paste these over the present Directory up-to-date, but we need to know how it works out!

EVALUATIVE CRITERIA FOR INTERGROUP RELATIONS PROGRAMS

by

Robert B. Johnson, Director of Research
The National Conference of Christians & Jews

Experience derived from numerous evaluative studies of human relation's agencies suggests that there are certain standardized questions that groups working in the human relations field might ask themselves, at periodic intervals, if they wish to have a permanent method of reassessing themselves and each other. In 1955, a sub-committee of Philadelphia affiliates of NAIRO drafted a set of questions that it considered appropriate for interorganizational discussion. This writer has drawn from the fuller set of questions proposed by the committee, and with his own additions, presents them here, with some elaboration on why each question is asked. They are subdivided into (1) Questions to ask on internal organizational structure; (2) Questions on interorganizational relationships, and (3) Questions on relations with the general community. They are as follows:

1. Questions on internal organizational structure

   a. What are the objectives and methods of our agency? What are we set up to do? Are these goals and methods re-examined periodically?

      As Robin Williams has noted, it is necessary for organizations to make periodic examination of their underlying goals and causal assumptions, since agencies often lack clarity about goals, may be aiming at several simultaneous or even contradictory goals, or may have adopted methods inappropriate to these goals. Also, these goals and methods must be continually re-examined, since organizational personnel often drift far away from their stated purposes unless they ask themselves with some frequency: Are we still doing what we set out to do?

   b. Do staff members and policymakers agree on the stated objectives of the agency?

      We assume that an agency will operate with maximum smoothness only if there is agreement in different levels of the program about what the goals and methods are supposed to be. Too often, the supposed policy-makers of an agency have lost touch with the everyday activities of staff members who must make day-by-day decisions; while the latter may become so actively and emotionally involved in specific problems that they lose sight of the program's original objectives. Where staff and policy-makers find themselves in sharp opposition to each other, a period of intensive discussion and assessment is indicated. Where the policymaking functions may have inadvertently been taken over by staff members, the agency might make a reassessment of the role of Boards of Directors and Advisory Committees, considering whether the new policy-making process might actually be of benefit to the agency.

*This document was developed as part of this author's appendix to the evaluative study of the American Friends Service Committee's Community Relations Program, sponsored by Russell Sage Foundation, November 1955. These comments stem from our attempt to realistically assess the crucial problems encountered in interagency and intraagency conflicts in the field of intergroup relations.

c. How are policy decisions arrived at?

The actual policymaking function of an organization is a valuable subject for study, in these terms: What are the group's assumptions on who should make policy, and from what philosophical premises are these assumptions based? Will case history analyses, or other intensive observations reveal who actually does make policy? Is this in line with the original philosophy? If not, so what -- is the agency function more or less smooth; more or less democratic; more or less effective?

d. Is the organization actually doing what it was set up to do?

This might be determined by a three-fold formulation of the questions an evaluator might ask: (1) What are the stated purposes and goals, and the organizational structure of this group? (2) How is policy made and transmitted and executed? (3) How does it actually look when the agency is operating in a community? The comparison between the original written statement of agency objectives and the observation of what the staff member is actually doing day by day is sometimes quite revealing.

e. Regardless of the answer to question "d", is the program actually being effective by intergroup relations and other standards?

This might be partly answered by the suggestion of more specific questions to ask on effectiveness:

1. Does the group have any adequate indicies by which it can measure change -- something that can be "counted"?

2. Is the agency using the most efficient office methods possible -- efficient filing systems, easy communication procedures, economy measures, keeping up to date?

3. How aware is the program of the best relevant social science materials -- researches, publications, theories found useful elsewhere? How much "social science" is the group using and how much does it need to use? What is meant by "using social science"?

4. Does the group have an adequate and accurate grasp of the nature of the minority community?

5. Is the agency aware of and using the best intergroup relations literature? ("The best" might be determined both by the evaluations of scientists and by the reports of other practitioners on what they have found most useful.)

6. Does the group have a minimum of "limitations" on its activity and is the group aware of its limits? (e.g., being a city, state, or federal agency; having a conservative Board of Directors; being dependent on certain community segments for funds; being tax exempt; being non-tax exempt.)

7. What would happen to intergroup relations in this community if the agency went out of business tomorrow?

The criteria of specific effectiveness will vary from one organization to another depending on its original philosophy or its type of motivation. However, if an evaluative survey finds that (a) the agency is not doing what it set out to do, but (b) is being effective- or the reverse - a sharp and agonizing reappraisal will be imposed on all levels of the program.

f. What are the functions of Board members, Committees, Executive Director, Staff, Volunteers?

It is important for an agency to be certain that each level of the program understands its function clearly, and knows what it is supposed to do and what others are supposed to do. For example, Boards of Directors and Advisory Committees must decide whether their function is to (a) make policy, direct, control; (b) advise, suggest, and modify policy decisions of staff; or (c) merely "rubber stamp" or act as a prestigeful "front" for what staff members seek to accomplish. The actual functions of the executive director should be clearly outlined. (Some intergroup agencies have already done this.) The staff members must know how much responsibility they must assume, and how much freedom and flexibility they have in making day-to-day decisions, and how they should use Boards of Directors or advisors. Volunteer workers, if the agency has been able to recruit them, should be clearly informed of where their energies and resources can be most effective. They must be shown, as so many volunteers are not, what they are expected to do, and why it is so important to the program.

g. Are there limitations under which the program operates? Are they inherent in agency structure and purpose, or can they be modified?

Observations of American intergroup relations agencies convince us that each is restrained to some extent by factors limiting the staff member's ability to function optionally, or "tying his hands." We note limitations such as these: being a municipal, state or governmental agency; being a minority-sponsored organization; lacking adequate funds and staff; possessing conservative directors or advisory committees; being tax exempt; being non-tax exempt; being relatively unsophisticated; lacking clarity about objectives. We suggest that each organization appraise itself in terms of these limitations, and see how they can be altered or modified; or how the staff member can extend himself as far as possible within the framework of these limitations.

h. How does an agency decide when to terminate a program?

This agonizing problem confronts many organizations: When may we say that the job is done and we can withdraw, or that we have achieved what we have set out to achieve? This question may be answered internally in accordance with the traditional objectives and methods of the given organization; but we further suggest that all interested or involved segments of the general community or the minority community be consulted for their opinion on whether a given program should be terminated. Serious public relations problems may develop if an organization assumes that it is time to withdraw despite the belief in the needy community that the problems have still not been solved. In our own experience with community-wide projects, we have suggested that programs be established on the basis of recognized community needs and that the program be terminated after the need is satisfied, without a time limit, hoping that the community has grasped the program's objectives and will carry them on. This is the ideal; on a more practical level, program termination often has to be based on how long the financial resources last.

i. Should an agency evaluate itself, and how should evaluation be done?

We recognize that formal program evaluation is a relatively recent and uncharted field, still not completely understood or endorsed by many agencies. We further recognize that evaluation may often be an experience that produces great anxiety in the minds of staff members as to what evaluation will reveal. For example, at a national meeting of intergroup relations practitioners, members made these statements in reference to evaluation:

> "Our Boards won't spend a nickel for evaluating car cards, though they will spend thousands on the cards. They are afraid of what they will find."

> "We are doing evaluation, but we are afraid of finding out certain things that are contrary to what our Boards think they are doing or should be doing. We do not dare to find certain things."

These comments suggest some of the hesitations that people express, when confronted with the prospect of program evaluation. However, if it is decided that evaluation should be done, the following sub-questions have been suggested, for an agency to ask itself:

1. Does staff participate in evaluation? Does staff have any voice in whether or how an evaluation should be conducted.

2. Is there an effective flow of information between staff members, or between staff members and Board members?

3. Are there adequate channels of communication, so that staff members may express opinions that may differ from those of policy makers?

4. Who evaluates work loads? Are budget and staff adequate?

5. How is program determined? How are priorities established when budget is allocated? What role does staff play in making these decisions?

If all segments of a given organization are agreed on the desirability of evaluation, we might suggest, at a later point, some summary principles of evaluation--how it may be conducted with a maximum of efficiency and a minimum of friction and anxiety.

2. Questions on interorganizational relationships

Experience has convinced us that appraisal of an organization's internal structure and functioning is but part of the problem of evaluation. The large number of intergroup organizations, with their varying philosophies, objectives, methods and resources suggest that the relationship of each to the other is an important subject for study if the total intergroup relations movement is to function adequately We therefore suggest these questions to ask about the relations of a given organization to the others in the field:

a. How much do we know about the purposes, objectives, and limitations of the other intergroup agencies?

We often note conflict or misunderstanding between intergroup agencies caused by lack of understanding of what another group is set up to do, or how it goes about executing its functions. Thus, certain organizations are engaged in perennial conflicts, locally and nationally; some organizations are "whipping boys," continually criticized for lack of militancy, or sophistication, or willingness to cooperate; a few organizations are viewed enviously as having substantial resources but "no program." Success of intergroup effort depends partly on a maximum of interorganizational coordination and understanding, and a minimum of interagency strife. We therefore suggest that each agency ask itself whether every constituent part of its program understands the total range of organizational potential in this field, asking of every agency: What is it set up to do? What does it actually do? What are its resources and facilities? And, how can we help it, and how can it help us?

b. Are there channels for communication among agencies, and coordination of activities?

Related to the factor of understanding all agencies in this field is the necessity of keeping information and ideas flowing smoothly from one organization to another. Each should ask itself if the machinery of communication might be improved still more. Some agencies have solved the communication problem through newsletters, some through periodic conferences, some through sharing the same building or offices. One method, effectively worked out in Philadelphia is the coordinating of the local affiliates of the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials into a single grouping with a series of luncheons and an agenda of projects to be developed jointly. Other cities might emulate this experience.

c. Does the agency have representation on committees of other agencies, and the reverse? Is this desirable?

One method of improving interagency communication is the delegation of staff or advisory committee members to serve as advisors or conferees with other agencies. This practice may have its disadvantages since it may serve to sharpen the areas of misunderstanding and disagreement between agencies, when the difference in their philosophies and objectives becomes sharply apparent. The desirability of maintaining communication in this manner might be a subject of discussion both within a given agency or among several agencies in this field.

d. Is an agency willing to share with another agency some different approaches to a similar problem?

It is currently recognized in intergroup relations that it is not necessary or even expedient to use only one method or technique of solving an intergroup relations problem, to the exclusion of all others. Rather, it is believed that action should be pursued along a multitude of fronts, employing numerous methods as effectively as possible. Therefore, it may often be feasible for organizations to coordinate their efforts in a given area, delegating specific functions in accordance with an agency's methods and resources. Intergroup organizations might ask themselves whether inter-organizational relationships might be improved by this type of coordination based on delegations of functions.

e. Is the organization trying, as far as possible, to exercise patience, understanding, and non-competitiveness in its relations with other intergroup organizations?

In addition to the mechanical details of maintaining fruitful communication between intergroup agencies, we suggest that an additional dimension should also be considered. Fluent communication is assured only if backed by a sincere desire on the part of each agency to view sympathetically the problems of another, to exercise patience and restraint when another agency's procedures are not immediately understandable, to seek to avoid the type of interorganizational competition for funds and credit that so dissipate the energies of the total intergroup relations movement. Perhaps the more vehement negative attitudes engendered in work such as this might be reserved for the opposition.

3. Questions on relations with the general community

We finally consider that an agency might view itself in terms of where it fits into the general community picture, its meaning in the community, its familiarity with the community, and the community's familiarity with the agency. Recognizing that no agency exists "in a vacuum," we suggest, rather, that each agency should be viewed in the community context -- how it relates to the general processes of American community life. We submit these questions.

a. Does the agency understand and agree upon the meaning of the word "community"? Does it know the various community resources and sources of information: the areas of support, indifference, and opposition to the agency's objectives?

Sociologist Louis Wirth, noting the carelessness with which people utilize the term "community" has stated that it has been used "with an abandon reminiscent of poetic license." It is true that people mean different things by community; some refer to only a territorial area: some mean people having common activities; some refer to those possessing shared interests; and some mean that a given aggregate has "a sense of psychological unity." At any rate, all persons in a given intergroup agency should be agreed upon the meaning of "community," should know their community's resources in terms of (1) intergroup agencies and forces; (2) other forces sympathetic to good intergroup relations; and (3) general community resources that can be utilized by all citizens. In addition, the intergroup relations world is showing its increasing sophistication by seeking to know the power structure of American communities, along lines pursued by Floyd Hunter in his book, Community Power Structure. Therefore, an intergroup agency should ask itself: Who runs things in this community? Who gets things started; who executes them? Do we know who our community "gatekeepers" are?

b. Is the agency sufficiently informed of the needs of the community, and in contact with such vital community segments as the media of communication, the forces of law and order, the persons responsible for each function of city, state, and federal government?

We suggest that in addition to understanding general community resources and how they can be tapped, an agency should ask itself if its communication with the general community is good: does it know what various areas of the community are thinking and needing; is it able to "knock on any door" when seeking help, information, or community sentiment; does it have a means of evaluating what the community thinks about the agency? Particularly, in time of crisis, would the agency have an immediate channel of communication with the relevant community segments? For example, in a community undergoing tension because of the imminence of public school desegregation, would the agency be able to alert immediately the media of communication to the proper handling of news; secure the cooperation of forces of law and order; invoke sanctions from outside the community wherever possible? And, at all times, is the minority community consulted or represented?

c. Finally, we ask again: What would happen to intergroup relations in the community if the agency went out of business tomorrow?

This is a harsh and cruel question, but one that each agency must have frequently asked itself. The value of such a question lies in this fact: it immediately makes every person involved ask himself more careful questions. What am I doing? What positive effect is my action having? Is it having any negative effects? Who in the community is benefiting from my actions and who is not? How can I improve the service that I am performing? In other words, some of the most crucial issues of program evaluation are involved in this extremely anxiety-producing question posed above. The process of answering this question may even increase the anxiety level of various segments of an organization's program; but, more likely, will make the evaluative experience a richer one for all persons involved.

Some additional questions on relations with the general community have been suggested by this sub-committee of Philadelphia affiliates of NAIRO. We will not elaborate on them here, but they are as follows:

d. How does our agency fit into the community picture?

e. What segment of the community are we trying to reach? To what extent are we successful in reaching it?

f. Does our constituency come to us with its problems?

In addition to these questions, it was suggested that each agency might consider developing a group of assumptions on community prejudice and discrimination from which it might operate, such as: What is our theory of how change comes about in intergroup relations? What is the best way to change prejudicial race attitudes, or to change discriminatory behavior? To what extent do changed attitudes result in changed behavior -- or the reverse? What is the optimum speed with which attitudes may be expected to change? These are vital questions that each agency might consider.

The reader may be surprised, disturbed, or appalled at the many questions posed in this discussion -- questions that require perhaps an "agonizing re-appraisal" of the way an agency has been thinking, functioning, interacting and communicating. However, past experience convinces us that whereas program evaluation may sometimes be viewed as a painful, startling, and anxiety-producing experience, it might more aptly be viewed as a time for complete stocktaking, a minimizing of duplication and wasted motion, an opportunity for widened communication and viewing of new organizational potentialities, and for "taking a giant step"toward progress in the mutually shared goal of seeking more efficient and effective practices in the human relations field.

PROFESSIONAL ETHICS

Paper Presented by Ira Gissen, American Jewish Committee, Cincinnati

at the
TRI-CITY CONFERENCE - LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY
May 8, 1959

Our field of endeavor is rapidly acquiring all of the accouterments of professionalization. Various associations to which we belong have or are now engaged in various studies of professional standards. An ever increasing number of workers in our field have received specific academic training for their work from institutions such as the Center for Human Relations Studies at New York University. The development of the internship program under the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials is but another milestone in our general movement toward professionalization.

There are many reasons why we seek the professionalization of our field. The rapid growth of organizations and agencies has created something of a personnel shortage and in consequence has aggravated conditions related to professionalization. This development has had a contradictory affect upon the professionalization of which I speak. The shortage of qualified workers has resulted in the employment of unqualified workers in a number of instances. The widespread recognization of this undesirable situation has stimulated many of us in our drive toward the professionalization of our field. We recognize that the lack of professionalization can wreck havoc upon the difficult and trying labors in which we are engaged.

However, it is my considered belief that the achievement of professional standards, per se, is not enough. If by professional standards we only mean training and experience and similar qualifications it would appear that we are omitting one of the most important characteristics of any of the established and recognized professions. I would suggest that we must also aspire to and work toward the establishment of professional ethics. The establishment and recognition of professional ethics is not something that is simply self-serving to us. Rather I would regard professional ethics as something that we owe to both the organizations which we serve and the communities in which we work.

It is not my intention to suggest a set of ethics or a code of ethics or means of enforcing the observance of ethics. It is my opinion that such action would be very premature at this particular point in the development of the professionalization of this field. Rather I would suggest that we begin to discuss what we mean by professional ethics, what areas of our activity professional ethics should cover, whether or not a code of ethics can be drawn, and whether or not a Committee on Professional Ethics could be or should be established.

It is my opinion that should we agree that the development of ethics is a necessary adjunct of the developing professionalization of this field then such ethical standards must be concerned with the ideals of duty, character, actions, and ends.

OUR NEW OFFICE

After two years in its aerie overlooking Times Square, NAIRO is abandoning the spectacular view to find lebensraum in a comfortable building nestled behind the Coliseum -- on 58th Street just west of 9th Avenue. Effective August 28th, JOHN LASSOE and FRANKYE BROWN will welcome NAIRO members to quarters half again as large as the present office, featuring a better layout and more attractive decor.

The building has been recently acquired and renovated by the Jewish Education Committee, which is accepting a few outside organizations as tenants. In adjacent but separate offices on the second floor will be NAIRO's new neighbors, the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing (FRANCES LEVENSON and MARGARET FISHER).

Use of meeting room facilities has been promised to NAIRO by the Jewish Education Committee, and air conditioning is likely by next summer. It should be a happy home; come up and see us some time!!!

CONFERENCE NEWS NOTES

Every member should have received by now: (1) a special mailing from the Conference Program Committee (LLOYD DAVIS, chairman), outlining the theme, topics, and expected speakers for the San Juan meeting; and (2) another mailing from the Conference Arrangements Committee (JOSEPH MONSERRAT, chairman), giving more details on travel costs, hotel arrangements, and the natural beauties of Puerto Rico. The latter package also included a copy of the Godkin Lectures given by Governor Luis Munoz Marin, expected to be one of the major speakers at the Conference.

DAVID SAWYER (Commissioners' Council on Human Relations) and JOHN YOSHINO (President's Committee on Government Contracts) report a total of thirty-three Washington, D.C.,

professionals and spouses definitely plan to attend.

And JOSEPH MONSERRAT (Migration Division, Commonwealth of Puerto Rico) has postcards in hand from over 235 NAIRO members who expect to be in San Juan .... 75 of these have already sent him hotel reservations.

IMPORTANT!!! Hotel reservations at the San Juan Intercontinental should be made now and should be made through the Conference Arrangements Committee. (People making reservations directly or through a travel agency run the risk of being charged regular room rates, rather than our very special Conference prices). Use the postcard sent to you in the last mailing from JOSEPH MONSERRAT, and be sure to indicate expected arrival and departure dates.

NOTE: Final information on air transportation plans will be sent to you in early September. Charter planes seem unlikely but there are non-charter possibilities (from New York City) that will be just as inexpensive.

NOTE #2: Paul Klein informs us that professionals paying their own expenss at San Juan may deduct the total cost in computing their income tax. This does not, however, include spouses and children!!!

The Department of National Private Services (JOSEPH ROBISON, American Jewish Congress, chairman) has signed up the following speakers and discussants for its session on "The Decade Ahead": ARNOLD ARONSON (N.C.R.A.C.), SOL RABKIN (Anti-Defamation League), JOHN MORSELL (NAACP), JOHN FEILD (Office of U.S. Senator Philip Hart), and ALAN REITMAN (American Civil Liberties Union). Topic of the Department's second session will be: "The Changing Role of the National Agencies in the Years Ahead," with speakers to be announced.

MARSHALL BRAGDON (Mayor's Friendly Relations Committee, Cincinnati), chairman of the Resolutions Committee, reports a distressingly meager flow of suggestions for the 1959 Statement of Concern. Man the typewriters now!!!

NAIRO MEMBERS ON THE MOVE

CHARLES LIVERMORE (formerly New York State Commission Against Discrimination) is the new Executive Director of the Commission on Youth Welfare, City of Chicago.

WILLIAM T. LIGGETT (formerly Catholic Interracial Council, New York City) will join the St. Louis NCCJ staff in September.

HELEN AMERMAN has been named as Housing Officer of the Oakland (Calif.) Redevelopment Agency.

ARNI S. ARNASON (former executive director, Vancouver Civic Unity Association) has accepted a post with the Department of Citizenship and Immigration in Saskatchewan.

EMERSON D. JAMES is the new Assistant Director of Interracial Service, Boy Scouts of America . He replaces A.J. TAYLOR, who has retired.

JACK ISSELHARDT is resigning as Executive Secretary of the Kansas Anti-Discrimination Commission to begin work on his Doctorate (Clinical Psychology).

JOHN T. BLUE, JR. has accepted a position with the Norfolk Division of Virginia State College.

INSIDE NAIRO: REGIONS, LOCAL GROUPS, DEPARTMENTS

HOWARD MC KINNEY (Community Relations Commission, Erie), chairman of the Department of Local Public Services, has just completed a "Comparison of Budgets and Salaries Scales of Twenty Local Public Agencies." The study was mailed to all Department members; a few extra copies are on hand in the National Office, available to others on request.

JOHN A. BUGGS (Los Angeles County Commission on Human Relations), NAIRO's Southwest Regional Chairman, reports the formation of a Los Angeles NAIRO. At its second meeting, in August, DAVID DANZIG (American Jewish Committee, New York) spoke on the role of local NAIRO groups in the total intergroup relations effort.

Chicago NAIRO has just launched a series of discussion meetings around topics scheduled for the San Juan Conference. JACK KENNA (National Safety Council) keynoted the first session, "Intergroup Relations in the Sixties," utilizing material brainstormed by the National Safety Council from over 200 national experts.

The report of the Commission on Civil Rights, "Washington Desegregation - 10 Years After," is rolling off the press at this writing. Expect it by month's end.....

NAIRO's Committee on Professional Standards (GEORGE SCHERMER, Philadelphia Commission on Human Relations, chairman) is hard at work on the development of a proposal for a staffed project to define standards for the accreditation of intergroup relations workers. There should be a report on this in San Juan.

JOHN LASSOE, FRANK SIMPSON (Connecticut Commission on Civil Rights), BENJAMIN LEVY (New Haven Jewish Community Council), and Frank Corbett (Bridgeport Intergroup Council) were speakers at a June 26th Connecticut NAIRO Conference in New Haven. Some thirty-five professionals and lay leaders attended the meeting, over which Northeast Regional Director IRVING GOLDABER (N.Y.C. Commission on Intergroup Relations) presided.

MORE NEWS OF NAIRO MEMBERS

CARRIE MISNER (Reading YWCA) became Mrs. Charles Arthur DIVINE on July 3rd. Carrie, a former NAIRO intern, will be living in Temple, Pennsylvania.

BEN D. SEGAL (Education Director, IUE) will attend a conference of the International Federation of Workers' Educational Associations in Stockholm, Sweden, during late August.

LEONARD JEFFRIES, NAIRO Student member, graduated with honors from Lafayette College in June. His honors thesis: "The Urban Crisis: Intergroup Relations in the Large Cities." He goes now to the University of Lausanne, Switzerland - - on a Rotary Fellowship.

JOHN A. MARTIN, JR. (NAIRO intern, Stiles Hall YMCA, Berkeley) will shortly begin work on a Master's degree in the School of Social Welfare, University of California. He will remain on the Stiles Hall staff on a part-time basis.

ERWIN FEIERTAG (NAIRO intern, Council for Civic Unity, San Francisco) is also returning to school - - at the University of California, where he will work on a Doctorate (Sociology).

A "Local Union Self-Evaluation Check List on Civil Rights" prepared by AARON ARONIN (Field Director, Jewish Labor Committee, Chicago) was featured in the May issue of the AFL-CIO Education News and Views.

HASKELL LAZERE (American Jewish Congress, Miami) is the proud father of a new daughter, born in New York in July.

NEW MEMBERS GALORE

Having finally crossed the magic 500 mark, NAIRO membership seems to be racing toward the next goal of 600. It now stands at 5 1 5!!!

The experiment with perforated sheets of labels bearing new members' names and old members' change of address was not entirely satisfactory. The labels were not large enough for many lengthy listings, and the stationer could not deliver the proper sheets in time for an already-overdue mailing.

FROM TEAR TO CUT: Experiment #2 now offers the new members and change of addresses on unperforated sheets (still gummed). As ideal relaxation from the strains of arduous labor, members are urged to take scissors in hand to bring their membership rosters up-to-date.

INTERNSHIP NEWS

The Chicago Urban League received a training grant from the Field Foundation and becomes the second participating agency in the 1959-1960 program. Raymond McCann has been selected as this year's intern.

And the St. Louis Urban League has selected John Francis Penn as its trainee.

Ernest attempts are still being made to secure additional foundation grants on a national basis. Since most foundation Boards do not meet during summer months, announcement of these is not likely before late September. In the meantime, agencies interested in participating in the third-year program are urged to contact the National Office - - to register their intention of applying for national matching grants, to obtain help in applications to local foundations or to obtain information on voluntary affiliation with the program....

To date, fourteen agencies have applied for matching grants of $2,500 for the year ahead. Foundations, please take note!!

N A I R O NEWSLETTER

October, 1959

CONFERENCE HIGHLIGHTS

Some 220 intergroup relations professionals, most of them NAIRO members, are expected at our Thirteenth Annual Conference in San Juan, Puerto Rico. Approximately one-third are bringing spouses, a new high for NAIRO gatherings. Over 110 individuals are involved in the program of one or more sessions at the four-day meeting. LOUISE BLACKHAM (Civic Unity Committee, Seattle) is again slated to win honors as delegate-from-the-greatest-distance. These then are the statistics....

And the program? The Governor of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Luis Muñoz Marín, will deliver what promises to be a memorable keynote. Assistant Labor Secretary George Lodge will challenge delegates with a penetrating analysis of "Discrimination: A World-wide Problem." Dr. DAN DODSON (N.Y.U. Human Relations Center), ARNOLD FORSTER (Civil Rights Division, Anti-Defamation League), and GEORGE SCHERMER (Philadelphia Commission on Human Relations) will again tackle the constructive use of conflict, this time from the point of view of agency role and responsibility. Finally, under the leadership of JOHN SLAWSON (American Jewish Committee), key representatives of three different fields will approach "Intergroup Relations, The Allied Disciplines, and Related Fields of Professional Activities": JOHN G. FEILD (Office of U.S. Senator Philip Hart), John Kidneigh (University of Minnesota School of Social Work), and Dr. Goodwin Watson (Teachers College, Columbia University).

Sandwiched in between the general sessions will be stimulating meetings of NAIRO Commissions, Departments, and Committees; the popular clinics inaugurated last year; gala receptions; social events; and important NAIRO business meetings. Your program is enclosed....

NAIRO STATEMENT OF CONCERN

All members, whether planning to attend or not, are invited to comment on the draft of our proposed Statement of Concern, also enclosed. Prepared by the chairman of the Resolutions Committee (MARSHALL BRAGDON, Mayor's Friendly Relations Committee, Cincinnati), it represents the advance thinking of NAIRO Conference delegates, as synthesized by one of our most creative members. However, this is but the first stage; your comments and additions are eagerly sought....

HERBERT AURBACH (Pittsburgh Commission on Human Relations) and others have just completed a piece of research, "Restrictive and Protective Viewpoints of Fair Housing Legislation: A Comparative Study of Attitudes," presented as a paper at the September meeting of the Society for the Study of Social Problems (SSSP).

CHARLES ABRAMS (former chairman, New York SCAD) was honored recently at an Award Dinner of the Catholic Interracial Council of New York City. Recent United Nations housing missions have taken him to Turkey and Bolivia, in the latter as head of a U.N. Technical Assistance delegation.

HAROLD A. LETT was honored by Newark and national colleagues at a Testimonial Dinner on September 30th.

STEPHEN REMSEN (Jewish Labor Committee, Philadelphia) was one of a group of guest columnists who recently stepped in to write "Strictly Politics" in the Philadelphia Tribune, during the illness of the regular writer.

HERMAN EDELSBERG (Washington, D.C., office, ADL) was just re-elected for another term as chairman of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House.

DIRECTORY OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS AGENCIES

No more apologetic promises!! The long-awaited DIRECTORY OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS AGENCIES WITH PAID PROFESSIONAL PERSONNEL is at the printer's. Every NAIRO member will receive one copy without charge (on or about November 1st); others may be purchased for $2.00 apiece, $1.50 in quantities of ten or more. The compendium -- first of its kind in eleven years -- lists more than 600 offices of intergroup relations agencies, together with executives' names and other pertinent data.

NAIRO IN THE NEWS

"Civil Rights in the Nation's Capital: A Report on a Decade of Progress," issued last month by NAIRO's Commission on Civil Rights, brought your association its biggest splurge of publicity in many years. Front-page stories in Washington papers were followed by a long story in the New York Times, editorial comment in the Washington Post, significant attention from Voice of America, a radio interview on WRC-Washington, and promise of feature articles in other publications. NAIRO's meager supply of surplus copies was oversubscribed before it arrived from Washington; there is talk now of another "printing."

Credit BEN SEGAL (Education Director, IUE, AFL-CIO) and WILLIAM KOREY (D.C.-Maryland Regional Director, ADL) for key service as editors and publicists....

Senator Philip Hart (D., Michigan) inserted the Washington Post article on the report in the Congressional Record; reprints of this are available from the NAIRO office.

M I S C E L L A N Y

Florina Lasker Fellowships in Civil Liberties and Civil Rights at Brandeis University during the Spring term, 1960, are being offered through the announcement enclosed with this Newsletter. Applications are due by November 1st!! (EDWARD KATZENBACH is Director of the program.)

NAIRO notes with deep sorrow the death last month of Alphonse B. Miller, former Finance Secretary of the American Friends Service Committee. Although not a member of NAIRO, he had agreed -- just a few weeks before his death -- to come to San Juan at his own expense, in order to take part in one of the Conference clinics. The Conference and the field of intergroup relations will miss his valuable contribution to our common cause....

Conference participants can anticipate lively discussion of the proposed amendment to the NAIRO By-Laws, formalizing the relationship of local NAIRO groups to national NAIRO. The proposal to recognize NAIRO chapters received overwhelming Board endorsement in principle, but there were many reservations about the section (#8) limiting policy statements by the local bodies. Discussion and vote is scheduled for the October 14th Business Meeting....

NAIRO membership is at a new high of 5 3 4 -- and, naturally, the goal has now been raised to 600!! REMINDER: Those joining NAIRO from this date on are credited as paid through 1960. This is a good recruiting season....

Old members are, of course, urged to pay their 1959 dues now if they have not already done so!!!!

The Interim Sub-Committee of the Governors' Civil Rights Committee will meet in San Juan during the NAIRO Conference. ELLIOTT SHIRK (Pennsylvania FEPC) is one of those scheduled to present papers to that body.

MEMO TO: The Members of NAIRO

FROM: Marshall Bragdon for the Resolutions Committee

DATE: September 23, 1959

Enclosed is a trial draft for the Statement of Concern to be discussed, revised and adopted at the San Juan conference. I welcome your frank and full suggestions for improvements in the draft. Where possible you are urged to send written drafts; just as you would say it in my place. Your general comments and critiques of its style, balance, gaps, etc., etc., are equally solicited. I anticipate that on certain important areas of our work, there will be considerable revision or addition proposed. Fine!

Mail will reach me at 105 City Hall, Cincinnati, Ohio, up to Friday, October 9. Beginning Sunday, October 11, I shall be at the San Juan Intercontinental Hotel, to confer with NAIRO people before the revised draft is presented to the conference Tuesday, October 13.

Please let me hear from you.

A STATEMENT OF CONCERN

What all men share in dignity, all men will strengthen and defend.

One year ago in its Pittsburgh Conference, the NAIRO membership adopted a Statement on Civil Rights elaborating that principle in a review of the state of equal rights efforts in education, housing, voting, and public accommodations, and challenging American leadership -- federal to local, official and civic -- to specific tasks which the times required.

That Statement remains as relevant as it is, in large part, still unimplemented. Reiterating its urgency, we supplement it now with our observations regarding the "unity amid diversity" which must mark any sound advance of American society.

Meeting in the period of the Eisenhower-Khrushchev visits and conferences, we join all humankind in the deep desire that they may begin to find a way out of the nuclear nightmare; so that men may yet have time to work out the "ordinary" -- but difficult enough -- problems of living together in cities, countries and continents.

In conference at San Juan, we are impressed by the Puerto Rican people's "Operation Bootstrap," their avoidance of nationalistic excesses, and their officials' teamwork with mainland cities in dealing with the pangs of free migration. We reassure them that most of our ancestors coming ashore since 1607 were regarded at first as problems," but as assets later.

We rejoice to see in Congress its first members of Chinese and Japanese ancestry, from Hawaii, which can tutor us in ethnic give-and-take. We hope to see Alaska's statehood marked in time by a similar Eskimo voice in our national counsels. More than symbols, such events strengthen the American nation-family at home and abroad.

Looking at our expanding network of intergroup agencies, we remind ourselves, and all citizens who support them, that unity amid diversity must be practiced here most of all. Each of us must recognize and understand the "other" group problems which are not one's own immediate specialty. No "Balkanization" of awareness and sympathy should divide concerned Americans.

Therefore our concerns reach many sorts of people: to the Puerto Ricans making new lives in our cities; to other Spanish-speaking newcomers; folk from the Appalachians and Ozarks, hunger-driven to cities which need but can't understand them; American Indians whose relocation deserves reexamination; refugees from Europe; and other immigrants, too, who often are indoctrinated in group prejudices on arrival.

Naturally our concern is directed as always to the most numerous victims of racial and religious prejudice and discrimination. But we do not forget the many less obvious casualities: the "unprejudiced discriminator" upon whom social pressures force acquiescence in practices of inequality; the majority member whose potential for acceptance of diverse people is killed by his segregated environment; the minority member, embittered by equivalent ghetto, deficiences of acquaintance, plus the real discriminations he faces. We cannot forget the innumerable decent, kindly families caught in neighborhood-change ordeals, who were capable of acceptance, not anxiety and bitterness, if the dreadful ritual could be changed.

Equally we feel for the incoming families whose struggle to better themselves in the American manner has triggered hostility, not praise.

Coming from many parts of the nation's life, many of us report that, in some respects, the temper of intergroup relations has deteriorated. There are obvious factors: the Southern situation and its complex northward ricochet; urban changes and the growing rub of unmet minority housing needs; and even the costs of progress — the minority-majority adjustment to new status relationships. Economic, political, social and psychological factors are all involved.

We are not surprised to see, for example, a sharper aggressiveness in the Negro community, and harder attitudes among many white citizens. While little or no communication is the southern norm, impediments to intergroup confidence and contacts show themselves in other regions.

To intergroup workers and community leaders, this trend is a challenge to redouble patient, honest consultation between group spokesmen, and then to maintain continuing communication. (In certain respects the same remedy is currently needed in interreligious situatinns.) Literally we must devise resourceful new negotiations involving more voices on both sides.

Relevant here is what some call the "race and crime problem." The facts are serious enough. Many of us have been stating them for years in relation to needed job opportunities, decent housing, and more education and motivation of minorities. But now when such interpretation is most needed, along with appropriate action, we see too many elements of the nation's news media failing professionally in interpreting what the raw facts mean. We honor those men, services and publications which present a balanced, perceptive account. We grant the difficulties of reporting events that can trigger emotions.

But the harsh fact is that in 1958-'59 there has been a marked increase of race-labelling in crime news, and in related "community problems" reporting, including juvenile delinquency stories. This practice is a threat to national unity whenever it inflames without informing, and shallowly describes serious problems without meeting our people's need to understand their causes. (The excellent but occasional interpretations to be found in every media merely emphasize what should be the standard of reporting.)

Much can be done about this trend, by citizens and professionals in many communities. Even when news networks are involved, local attitudes are affected, for which press, radio and TV executives and reporters must admit some responsibility. Conferences should be sought involving intergroup workers, minority spokesmen and community leaders to discuss "our common problem" with newsmen. Many of the latter will welcome and utilize a discussion, but bristle at "pressure." Many suck local consultations can also buttress efforts of our national agencies to confer with networks and wire services.

Police-citizen frictions have marred the year in a number of cities. We could not adequately analyze the varied situations here, but two remedies can be stressed: (1) Human relations training has been tried and tested by many police departments, aided by intergroup agencies in institutes and consultations, so that any city's police can tap into what is working elsewhere. (2) Equally important is the necessity of maintaining "conference" relations involving police, minority, civic and agency leaders, and at times the daily and minority press. Together these approaches can build teamwork, ventilate grievances and ease stereotypical hostility. Each of our cities should check its assets for such communication.

There is no new way to say that racial restriction upon the housing supply continues as the toughest intergroup problem -- in its effects upon the minds and lives of millions of people, white and colored. Swift panic changes in old neighborhoods and a Caucasian cordon of suburbs inexorably continue to mal-educate American youth and adults in unhealthy separatism.

Compared to this on-going un-fitting of people for emotional balance and civic teamwork, the year's events contain no large immediate antidote. Most significant was the passage of the first state antidiscrimination laws affecting private housing, in Connecticut, Massachusetts, Colorado and Oregon. Add to this Pittsburgh's local ordinance, following New York City's lead in 1958. Thus a beginning is made. FEP's 14 years experience may speed its tooling-up. It will need every facility available against the housing industry's "private government" and its long conditioning of American mores and status anxieties.

Other points of hope include HHFA's abandonment of racial quotas in relocation housing; the U.S. Civil Rights Commission's study of housing and its call upon the President to state a firm direction of federal policy; a few additions to integrated housing developments; more active concern in religious bodies about segregation's costs, and aid to local pledge campaigns for open neighborhoods.

Interreligious relations in terms of the 1960 presidential election have begun and will continue to spotlight this area of our responsibility, in a manner not conducive to unemotional analysis and a search for equitable ways of living with differences. Greater responsibility will thus rest upon religious leaders and intergroup programs to meet extra strains. Similar sympathetic, reasonable efforts to resolve religion-in-education problems must surely continue. We remind ourselves and all citizens that as we from different faiths work together on other than religious group problems, we fit ourselves indirectly for interfaith adjustments, too.

Inter-nationalities problems and programs, we suggest, deserve more attention than they usually get in intergroup discussions. Immigrants are still coming into our cities. Even in those where nationalities services operate, there may be need for extra intergroup skill in interpreting to them the other minorities and the variety of ethnic attitudes they will encounter.

In a sense there are no important or unimportant minorities. There are just people in their rich variety, their needs, their anxieties -- and at bottom, their capacity for finding themselves and contributing themselves in a land of unity amid diversity.

IN APPRECIATION

Please know how deeply grateful and very honored I am for having been given the opportunity to work with you for the coming year. As a former Department Chairman, I acquired a great respect for the importance of this phase of NAIRO's program. You may recall that in the very first issue of SHOP TALK, our Department newsletter, I stated:

> "The basic objective of the Department is to facilitate the exchange of information that will help local private agency people to do their jobs better and more cooperatively. Anything that furthers that exchange is a legitimate activity of the Department."

I would like to add to the above statement this thought.

NAIRO is blessed with an abundance of talent among its ever increasing membership. NAIRO thrives on the competent use of its older and more experienced members but, at the same time and equally important, it encourages and moves forward those new members to the field, who show signs of advancing in professional growth. This is a good thing.

Often, however, out there among the rank and file are members with talent and ability, but who go unnoticed and undiscovered. An active departmental program can help us to pinpoint these workers. It can enable us to encourage them and bring them along. It can help us to provide them with a means of expression - a channel through which they can convey their ideas and thoughts to those who must make ultimate policy decisions. This, among other reasons, is why I feel the departmental activity in NAIRO is immensely important and vital to the maintenance of a stable organization and the successful growth of a thriving one.

The responsibility which is yours and the work it entails can be tremendously challenging and endlessly rewarding. I know that, with the coming year, NAIRO's Departments, through activity which is creative and imaginative, will grow by leaps and bounds, and that behind this up-surge of new growth, expanded membership and increased program, will be the diligent and dedicated work of Department Chairmen: Virgil Border - Howard McKinney - Virginia Huebner - Saul Lesser and Ross Clinchy.

MEMBERSHIP

Information which I presently have on hand and which is likely already dated, indicates the following membership breakdown among the various departments:

Local Public Services
	Professionals	78
	Board Members, others	36
	Total:	114
Local and State Private Services
	Professionals	156
	Board Members, others	43
	Total:	199
State Public Services
	Professionals	54
	Board Members, others	7
	Total:	61
National Private Services
	Professionals	94
	Board Members, others	4
	Total:	98
Federal Services
	Professionals	20
	Total:	20
Associate Members and Unaffiliated
	Professionals	48
	Total:	48
	GRAND TOTAL:	540

We certainly want to increase the membership of our various departments but at the same time we want to hold on to those we have. One device for maintaining interest in NAIRO is the publication of a newsletter. I would hope that this year we can have five SHOP TALKS in circulation. If not a SHOP TALK at least some means of promoting the exchange of ideas and information among our membership. San Juan was just the beginning for NAIRO's consideration of the Decade Ahead. It would be a healthy thing to keep this "BIG THINK" going among the rank and file, and a proven way of doing so is through the publication and circulation of a newsletter.

You might want to give some thought to this. NAIRO now has something like 48 Associate Members and Unaffiliated Professionals. Since these members are not in a Department, how can we maintain their interest and better utilize their skills and talents?

CONTINUITY

An increasing number of NAIRO members are of the opinion that one year Department and Commission appointments are far too inadequate and that such appointments should be for two years. Since we are still striving to secure a greater degree of continuity in our work, I would especially request new Department Chairmen to contact their predecessors just as soon as possible and secure files and records, ideas and suggestions with respect to what has gone on in the past.

SHARING

Just as it is important to encourage and stimulate the exchange of information and ideas among members of our various departments, so it is essential between departments. I sincerely hope that we can accomplish this objective with some degree of success.

Speaking of sharing - I have enclosed a copy of an address, "Some Do's and Don'ts in working with Foundations", delivered by Adam Yarmolinsky in San Juan. I have also enclosed a copy of a letter which I received from Richard Taylor, who chaired the Clinic, "How can we establish and maintain integrated communities without adopting a Quota Plan?".

CONCLUSION

Taking the first step is often the most difficult. Now that I have made that initial contact with each of you, I do hope that you will give some serious thought to the matter of building our departments, servicing the membership of those departments and, all in all, helping NAIRO to become the kind of professional instrument which it can.

Remember, if you have an idea - please share it with the rest of us and JUST AS SOON AS POSSIBLE.

THANKS!

LETTER FROM RICHARD TAYLOR

American Friends Service Committee
20 South 12th Street
Philadelphia 7, Pennsylvania

I don't know that anything very new or significant came out of the Clinic at which I presided on "How We Can Establish and Maintain Integrated Communities Without Adopting a Quota Plan?". I thought I might just tell you the major points given by the different panelists and one rather interesting idea that came out of the discussion which followed.

Morris Milgram led off by saying that he doesn't feel that integrated communities can be established and maintained without using a quota system. He suggested the idea of "controlled occupancy" as against the word "quotas", stressing that the former presents the true picture of including all Negroes in the housing market. He also mentioned the stabilization funds, which are being developed in Bolton Hills and in Palo Alto, as methods of maintaining integration. In these, properties are bought to keep an area integrated.

Casey Jones was second with his "quarter-million dollar dream". This involves the establishment of a foundation which will buy a house in four to six different areas of a city and then resell them to minority group people with the hope that they would move in within a week of one another. He went into some detail describing how the purchases could be related to community relations efforts, to the handling of tensions, etc.

Bill Valentine's opinion was that legislation is the best way forward in this area. He also mentioned the possibility of intergroup relations people getting agreements among housing industry people so that a person who does go forward in an integrated project won't be left out on a limb.

John McDermott agreed with Valentine in stressing the importance of legislation and he also mentioned, though without necessarily approving of them, other ideas such as (1) manipulation of the economic level of developments (2) careful site selection (3) a buyer self-restraint education program.

The idea which came out in discussion and which might have some implications for future NAIRO work was that a special Institute for interested NAIRO members might be run to better equip them for the particular task of working with the housing industry and in the whole area of housing. This would be a NAIRO Conference focusing just on the problem of housing.

SOME DO'S AND DON'T'S IN WORKING WITH FOUNDATIONS

Remarks by Adam Yarmolinsky at
NAIRO Conference
San Juan, Puerto Rico
October 13 to 16

Dwight MacDonald described one of the major foundations in the United States as "a large body of money entirely surrounded by people who want some". That's the way a foundation must look to the casual observer. But foundations are made up of people as well as investment portfolios. What distinguishes foundation giving from individual giving is that foundation officers and directors devote a good deal of their time to considering where the foundation's money should go, according to some kind of overall plan.

The individual giver seldom has the time or the inclincation to plan his giving, and in any event he must take what is offered when he responds to a national fund drive. He cannot discuss with the American Red Cross the various program alternatives that it is considering for the coming year, and then decide which ones he will support.

Foundations attach particular importance to their planning functions, because the total of foundation resources is so small, as compared to the total amount of individual giving. Even the behemoths of organized philanthropy are not big enough to bring the foundation's share of charitable giving much over three per cent. This is why foundations are always looking for projects that will bear out the Biblical injunction to be fruitful and multiply.

Before I go any further, let me make one essential distinction. Foundations are competent to manage their own affairs. They do not consider themselves competent or entitled to manage the affairs of their grantees. Nor do they have any interest in the applicant who proposes to adapt his plans to those of the foundation. They believe, and rightly so, that any organization (or individual) whose purposes are do weak that he will shift them in exchange for financial support, is not strong enought to do the job he proposes to do. This is not to say that an organization may have more projects then it can possibly finance, and may make its choice subject to the availability of outside financing. But all of these must be of its own devising, to serve its own purposes, rather than to attract foundation funds.

There are a few operating foundations, which employ their funds to conduct research and educational programs of their own devising, employing full-time staff or consultants for this purpose. Most foundations, however, have nothing to offer but money. This is why they must rely on you to bring to them specific proposals for work in the areas they have previously selected, and this is why they expect you to assemble the people and the ideas necessary to get the work done.

Foundations have found their way into the civil rights field by what some of us regard as the back door. The charter of the foundations' existence is the provisions of the Internal Revenue Code exempting them from taxation so long as they engage in "educational, charitable, and scientific" activities. Working for equality of opportunity seems to me as much an act of charity as clothing the poor and feeding the hungry. But rather than challenge directly those who main tain the opposite opinion, the foundations have chosen to bring this work under the rubric of education. Educational programs in intergroup relations are not limited to courses in classrooms or research in universities. The work that all of you do in educating people in your communities about the problems with which you are concerned is undoubtedly educational work within the meaning of the Internal Revenue Code.

The one activity in which foundations are expressly forbidden to assist you, under the statute, is "propaganda to influence legislation", and you would be well advised to bear in mind that mere mention of legislative activities tends to make foundation officers blanch and freeze - and with good cause. Again, this is not to say that foundations will object to your engaging in legislative activities, so long as they are quite distinct and separate from your educational work. What they will not and cannot do is to help you in your efforts to influence legislation. A question I shall not attempt to deal with this afternoon is how far a research project can concern itself with legislative matters, before it transgresses on the forbidden area. Let me only suggest that the simplest test is one of good faith: are you really trying to marshal the arguments on both sides of a legislative issue, or have you already made up your mind?

Assume then that you have developed an educational project, or a number of projects in inter-group relations, for which you are seeking financial support. You have put your ideas into concise, comprehensible form, with a realistic estimate of the difficulties. You have looked over the foundation field, and identified those with programs or interests to which your projects might be relevant. There are foundation directories, and there are professional advisers who will help you in your canvass, but I would suggest that the simplest and most effective method here is to ask around among your friends who have done business with foundations.

At this point you must take your courage in both hands, pick out the most likely prospect, and send in your proposal. You may want to ask for an interview as well, and if the foundation is at all interested, you will get one. But don't ask for the interview first; the person you see will want to examine your proposal in writing before he talks with you.

In your written application and in your interview, be business-like and direct. Remember, that the foundation needs you to accomplish its purposes. If it doesn't need you, your own pressing need for funds to meet your payroll is beside the point. Foundation officers are not hard-hearted men; quite the contrary. But they cannot afford to spend their limited funds on your problems, unless you are working on their problems. You must make them see the public need for what you propose to do. But this is not the same thing as your private needs, deserving though your organization may be.

Foundations very seldom make grants for general support. They feel, as I indicated earlier, that they must put their limited funds to uses where the multiplier effect will be greater. They do want to know, however, where your general support is coming from, so that they can be sure you will be able to backstop your proposed operation effectively. You should give them this information briefly but solidly documented.

Some Do's and Don't's in working with Foundations

Another assurance they will want is that your proposed project has a terminal point beyond which their financial support will no longer be needed. Ideally, it should not only become self-supporting, but it should attract other funds to support larger-scale operations based on its example. No one expects you to guarantee these results. But you must counter the reasonable fear that your proposal may become a continuing drain on foundation resources, limiting its essential freedom of action for the future.

One final word: I have said that the foundations need you, to do their work. It would be unreasonable to say that they are fully aware of that need. But a good deal of their lack of awareness is based on ignorance and misinformation about what you are doing. It is a genuine service to keep them informed about your activities, if they have any potential interest in the subject-matter of your concerns. This is not to say that foundation officers have time to waste on social calls and gossip. They are at least as busy as you are, and probably more bothered by importunate and irrelevant visitors. Nor do they appreciate roundabout approaches to a grant request. But if you will approach them, again in a business-like way, and again first in writing, with concise reports of your activities, and of developments in your field, tailored to their interests, you will soon find, I believe, that you have established a mutually profitable relationship, and one that can ripen into a relationship of mutual trust and confidence.

CIVIL RIGHTS IN THE NATION'S CAPITAL:

A REPORT ON A DECADE OF PROGRESS

Available now in pamphlet form, this report received nationwide publicity when first released in September, 1959. Typical of press comment is the Washington Post (page one) story quoted in the attached Congressional Record reprint.

Articles by District of Columbia race relations experts analyze in detail the marked changes in patterns of segregation since 1947-8, covering such areas of Washington life as: housing, public schools, craft unions, federal employment, public and private health and welfare agencies, community institutions, public accommodations, District of Columbia government employment, and private employment. Other articles give thoughtful attention to the dynamics and techniques of the social change that serves as "something of a model" in the field of race relations.

Since racial integration in the nation's Capital is of importance to every American, this progress report belongs in your library! And since this report proves that rigid segregation patterns can be changed, it deserves wide circulation among those in your community who doubt that it is possible!

CIVIL RIGHTS IN THE NATION'S CAPITAL: A REPORT ON A DECADE OF PROGRESS is a publication of the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials. Edited by Ben D. It appeared originally as Volume I, No. 5, of the Journal of Intergroup Relations, in September 1959. The present unabridged pamphlet edition was published in November, 1959.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 86th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

Vol. 105 WASHINGTON, TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1959 No. 164

DESEGREGATION IN WASHINGTON, D.C.

Mr. HART. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD an article entitled "Experts Praise Progress in Desegregation Here," written by Jean White, and published in the Washington Post of September 14, 1959. The article reflects the sort of constructive things which can be achieved by the complete involvement of sincere people in efforts to remedy such a situation.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXPERTS PRAISE PROGRESS IN DESEGREGATION HERE

(By Jean White)

Washington has calmly and quietly undergone a major social revolution in the last decade, a group of race relations experts has concluded in a study released yesterday.

The experience here, they said, demonstrates that a community can make a peaceful transition from a segregated to a quasi-integrated city without violence or major disturbance.

The 133-page study, "Civil Rights in the Nation's Capital: A Report on a Decade of Progress" was released yesterday in New York City by the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials. It is the work of 17 race relations experts here.

CHANGE SINCE 1948

Just a little over a decade ago, the report points out, a survey directed by Joseph D. Lohman found that Negroes were completely segregated in the Nation's Capital, and subject to a variety of discriminatory indignities. That was in 1948.

Negroes couldn't eat in downtown restaurants, get a room in a downtown hotel, or go to a downtown movie or play. They attended separate schools and churches and went to separate swimming pools and playgrounds.

Outside the Federal Government, they could obtain only laborer or service-type jobs. Strict segregation was the rule in the District Fire Department and many public and private welfare institutions.

Now, most of this has changed, the intergroup relations experts said in their decade-after report. But, they emphasized, pockets of stubborn discrimination and segregation still exist in Washington.

Using a three-point scale, the researchers summed up desegregation progress here in this way:

Good progress, from segregation to almost total desegregation, in schools, hotels, restaurants, theaters, public recreation facilities, public and private health institutions, and public social welfare agencies.

Fair progress in some areas of Federal employment, housing, urban renewal, churches, and private social welfare agencies.

Slower progress in local employment—both District government and private industry—professional organizations, and unions.

Singled out for particular attention in the report are the discriminatory practices of craft unions in the construction industry. Many of these unions the researchers emphasized, are blocking employment and apprenticeship opportunities for Negroes.

AREAS OF DISCRIMINATION

Many other areas of discrimination still remain despite the last decade of great social change here, the report notes.

Even though Negroes have broken into the white-collar ranks of Federal employment, most still are found in grade 5 or below. Few Negroes have climbed to executive ranks in the police and fire departments, the survey reports. Because of residential segregation patterns, many Negroes still live in one-race areas and their youngsters attend schools with enrollments substantially Negro.

The decade's great transformation in human relations here was accomplished with only three minor, quickly ended incidents, the race experts reported.

These came in 1950, when the Interior Department integrated its swimming pools; in 1953, when the District Recreation Department integrated a pool and playground, and in 1954, when some 2,500 senior and junior high youngsters stayed out of school for a few days at the beginning of public school desegregation.

Credit for the good record of orderly change here, the report says, should go to the leadership of the Federal Government in executive policy and judicial decisions, the social-action role of voluntary groups, and the firm action of some authorities, notably the Board of Education.

FORMULA FOR SUCCESS

"Washington experience," the survey emphasizes "furnished additional evidence in the support of the contention that morally right, authoritative decisions on desegregation, announced by high-level leadership and carried out without equivocation, ambiguity or delay, will be accepted by the community without disturbance or violence."

Law, the experts also noted, performs a valuable function as "a framework for social change" and makes the question of segregation one of "equity and individual rights" rather than of local custom.

In releasing the study yesterday, John V. P. Lassoe, Jr., executive secretary of the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials, said the Washington experience can serve as "something of a model" for social change in the field of race relations.

"The eyes of the world," he added, "are always on our Nation's Capital, and it is good that they will see there the kind of progress that we believe can take place in every American city that still lives with patterns of segregation."

REPORTING PERSONNEL

The report was edited by Ben D. Segal, education director of the International Union of Electrical, Radio, and Machine Workers, AFL-CIO, and William Korey, director of the District-Maryland office of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Brewer, District Deputy Welfare Director; Ross Clinchy, executive director of the President's Committee on Government Employment Policy; Isaac Franck, executive director of the Jewish Community Council of Greater Washington; John Y. Yoshino, compliance officer of the President's Committee on Government Contracts.

McGraw, housing economist with the Housing and Home Finance Agency; George B. Nesbitt, intergroup relations officer with the Urban Renewal Administration; Margery Ware, executive secretary of Neighbors, Inc.; Walter E. Blue, Jr., Virginia State College professor now on leave as community organizer with the Adams-Morgan demonstration project, and Joseph H. Douglass, program coordination officer with the Health, Education, and Welfare Department.

EXPERTS' SUMMARY

Here is the way these intergroup relations specialists sum up the deeds of progress in civil rights in the Nation's Capital:

Housing: The most serious obstacle to integrated housing in the Washington metropolitan area is the exclusion of Negroes from new housing in the suburbs, most built with Federal aid.

Within the city there has been a gradual, orderly housing integration without violence or a wholesale flight of white residents. But many Negroes still live in one-race sections in the older central core of the city or the Northeast, in deteriorating, crowded housing.

Federal employment: Ten years ago Negroes were generally relegated to the most menial and lowest-paid jobs. Now more than half of the Negroes in Federal employment work in integrated offices. Many others are mail carriers. In 1956, a survey showed that Negroes made up about one quarter of employes in 62 Federal agencies, and of these some 53 percent were in white-collar jobs But of the white-collar Negro employes, 84 percent were still in the lowest four classification grades.

Still, about one-sixth of the white-collar workers have broken through to positions of some responsibility or professional status.

Private employment: Among the gains are the employment, sometimes limited, of Negroes with the utility companies, with some department stores as clerks and office workers and with the D.C. Transit System.

MEANWHILE, BACK AT NAIRO

The Board of Directors met in Detroit on January 8th and 9th, with the Executive Committee meeting two days earlier. High priority on the agenda was scheduled for (a) a re-survey of the NAIRO Commissions, (b) standards for chartering NAIRO Chapters, and (c) the interrelated questions of staff expansion and financing.

Board action (in San Juan last October), divorcing Commission reports from the new quarterly Journal, raised fresh questions about the role and function of these groups. The Executive Committee was charged with developing specific recommendations on Commission activity, personnel, location and interrelationships. Decisions made in Detroit will be reported next month in the Newsletter.

Chartering of local NAIRO Chapters was authorized by an amendment to the By-Laws adopted at the Annual Conference. The action came after a year of study by a special committee headed by the Reverend H. BENJAMIN SISSEL, Dept. of Social Education and Action, United Presbyterian Church in the USA. Again, the Board asked the Executive Committee to develop the standards and procedure for formal recognition of the local professional groups that have been functioning for years in most large cities. The Board's action on this will also be reported in the February Newsletter.

The Board, the Executive Committee, and the Resources and Planning Committee have been hard at work since October, seeking foundation grants to permit the employment of an Assistant Director and additional office help for NAIRO. First assignment would be the Decade Ahead "Big Think" program, with considerable travel to urban centers where NAIRO members and other professionals are located.

* * * * * *

NAIRO's membership has reached an all-time high: 5 8 2, as of December 31, 1959.

Formation of a special committee to explore the relationship of NAIRO to private and public international exchange programs has been authorized by the Board. The committee will also be charged with recommending ways of establishing contact with intergroup relations workers in other nations and with surveying NAIRO's role at the United Nations. Board action came as a result of a recommendation made by one of the clinics at the October Annual Conference.

Six interns are presently involved in the third year of NAIRO's national internship program, receiving a year of on-the-job professional training in intergroup relations at the Chicago Urban League, St. Louis Urban League, Urban League of Greater New York, St. Louis Board of Police Commissioners, American Jewish Committee (Chicago), and New York-Westchester Regional Office of NCCJ.

Plans for the 1960 NAIRO Conference in Cincinnati are proceeding apace. VIRGINIA COFFEY heads an active committee of local professionals that includes MARSHALL BRAGDON (Mayor's Friendly Relations Committee), CHARLES POSNER and ROBERT PERLSZWEIG (Jewish Community Relations Committee), Malcolm Chandler (NCCJ), Mrs. Jan Karlson (Fellowship House), and Joseph Hall, William Decatur and Lois Conyers (Urban League).

"GOALS, DIRECTIONS AND PRIORITIES IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS IN THE DECADE AHEAD"

A NAIRO PROGRAM FOR 1960

The field of intergroup relations needs to achieve consensus on its goals, directions and program priorities for the next ten years. Effective action depends on carefully planned adjustment to new dimensions of old problems, as well as to new problems created by ever more rapid social change. NAIRO proposes to help intergroup relations professionals and lay leaders arrive at consensus on some of these matters through a one-year program of conferences, study and discussion that will be launched on January 20-22, 1960.

The program has three working goals:

(a) To contribute to a better definition of the field, with special reference to the knowledge, skills and training needed.

(b) To contribute to a better appraisal of those factors in our international, national and community life which are likely, now or in the next ten years, to affect the nature of intergroup relationships.

(c) To contribute to a better understanding of the inter-agency relationships, roles and responsibilities that now exist in the field, and of the adjustments that will be necessary in the years ahead.

This program has five phases:

(1) A January Consultation (New York City), bringing together some thirty leading intergroup relations practitioners and selected experts from related fields for a three-day discussion of key questions and issues likely to influence intergroup relations work in the next decade. Papers, proceedings and pertinent questions will then be sent to the entire field.

(2) Study and discussion of the published material by all NAIRO Commissions, Chapters, Departments, Committees, Regional Meetings, and other professional bodies -- with special attention to definition of the new directions and changing goals.

(3) A second mid-year consultation, involving a different group of leading intergroup relations professionals and experts from related fields in an examination of additional key intergroup relations problems and broader social issues, projected for the decade ahead. Again, papers, proceedings and pertinent questions would be published and distributed to the entire field.

(4) Study and discussion of this material by all NAIRO bodies, especially through regional meetings. Attention will focus on implementation, i.e., what do we as professionals need to do to cope with the new dimensions and new problems?

(5) As the theme of the 1960 NAIRO Annual Conference (Cincinnati: November 15-18), the development of consensus on goals, directions and priorities in intergroup relations. Conference proceedings will be published as a final synopsis of the year's concentrated study and discussion.

ON THE CHARTERING OF CHAPTERS

NAIRO Chapter chartering requirements and application procedure were established by the Board of Directors at its January 8-9 meeting in Detroit. In essence, applications for Charters -- to be submitted to the Board through the Regional Chairman -- must contain the names of at least five members in good standing, a clear delineation of the Chapter's geographic area, and a set of By-Laws compatible with the national By-Laws and acceptable to both local members and the National Board. Applications are now being received....

Careful consideration was given to the question of Chapter membership: "A member of (national) NAIRO shall automatically become a member of any Chapter in his area. Associate and student members of NAIRO may participate fully as Chapter members but may not vote or hold office. Non-members of NAIRO may participate in a Chapter's activity but may not belong, vote or hold office."

Thoughtful discussion resulted in two restrictions, one temporary, on Chapter activity: "(1) No awards or citations may be given by local Chapters without the permission of the national Board of Directors. (2) Pending development of national NAIRO policy on agency staff appointments and dismissals, no Chapter shall issue public statements regarding same."

OTHER BOARD ACTION: JANUARY 8-9

At its Detroit meeting, the Board of Directors also:

* Accepted the Treasurer's report for 1959, showing total receipts of $15,451.84 and total expenditures of $29,245.15. (Copies of the financial statement are available to members, on request.)

* Authorized employment of an Associate Director (and related expenses) as soon as $15,000 can be raised outside the present 1960 budget.

* Authorized appeals to foundations for funds (a) to subsidize NAIRO's JOURNAL, (b) to establish a revolving fund for other publications, (c) to aid Chapter development, and (d) to launch an informational services program.

* Voted to activate idle NAIRO Commissions and to delay the decision on their future role and function until the Resources and Planning Committee can complete a thorough review of the entire NAIRO structure.

* Charged the newly-formed Committee on International Relations with consideration of a proposal for an International Conference on Intergroup Relations Work.

* Charged its Membership Committee (Mrs. FRANCES COUSENS, Michigan FEPC, chairman) with (a) a special drive to recruit non-member professionals in intergroup relations agencies and (b) the study of the role in NAIRO of non-professional members.

ON THE REGIONAL AND LOCAL FRONT

The Great Lakes Region will hold its first regional conference in Toledo, Ohio, (University of Toledo) on Saturday and Sunday, June 11th and 12th. ABRAHAM F. CITRON (Jewish Community Council, Detroit) heads a five-state planning committee. The meeting, tentatively titled "Great Lakes Think," will deal with four of the topics discussed at the national consultation last month: (1) Population Growth and Shifts, (2) Professionalization of Intergroup Relations Worker and Work, (3) Changing Status of the Negro in America, and (4) Changing Interreligious Relationships.

The Middle South Region has announced plans for a regional conference at the Willard Hotel, Washington, D.C., on Friday, May 6th. The theme is: "Forward to Full Citizenship: What Are Your Next Steps?" SAMUEL B. DANLEY (Office of the U.S. Postmaster General) heads a thirteen-man planning committee for the seven-state meeting.

NAIRO'S Southwest Region -- chaired by HELEN AMERMAN (Oakland, California, Redevelopment Agency) -- is planning a variety of gatherings to capitalize on an April visit to the Coast by NAIRO President FREDERICK B. ROUTH. Included will be a North-South meeting of California professionals. President ROUTH will visit Denver, San Francisco, and Los Angeles -- and may penetrate the Northwest Region as well (Seattle and possibly Portland).

Philadelphia NAIRO installed a new set of officers late last month. HAROLD MC COO (Parkside Community Branch, Y.M.C.A.) succeeded FLORENCE KITE (Commission on Human Relations) as chairman. R. DEAN SHORT (Committee on Race Relations, Friends Philadelphia Yearly Meeting) is the new vice-chairman, and LOUIS BALLEN (Philadelphia Public Schools) becomes Secretary. The group is advancing plans for a variety of discussion and in-service training sessions, including continuation of NAIRO's "big Think" dialogue.

In New York City, Northeast Regional Chairman EMANUEL MURAVCHIK (Jewish Labor Committee) has asked PAUL KLEIN (attorney; formerly with the Commission on Intergroup Relations) to serve as temporary chairman of a local group. A series of discussion meetings are being planned for the spring and fall, again encompassing some of the "Big Think" topics. April 18th is the date for the first of this series and specific notices will be mailed shortly to New York City NAIRO members.

Pittsburgh NAIRO met on March 9th to hear a report on national intergroup relations trends from NAIRO's Executive Secretary JOHN LASSOE.

A special need is reported by Friendship House, New York City, which seeks a dedicated worker at an admittedly sacrificial salary ($50-$60 per week) to staff its growing program. Friendship House is an organization of Roman Catholic laymen and women, "dedicated to working for love of God on the elimination of racial prejudice and discrimination." MARY DOLAN (Executive Director, Friendship House, Chicago) will answer inquiries and interview applicants from March 15 to April 15 at the New York City office: Friendship House, 417 West 145th Street, New York 31, New York.

YOUR INQUIRIES: AN EDITORIAL COMMENT

One of the few frustrations of an otherwise satisfying job arises from your inquiries on substantive matters. We welcome them, but deplore the fact that they must so often go unanswered.

It may be PHIL CAMPONESCHI writing to ask how many local units of the American Dental Society are integrated, or HELEN BURKE inquiring about program evaluation techniques developed by public agencies, or IRV GOLDABER calling to find out how many municipal agencies have subpoena powers, or FRANK MAGRATH quizzing us about successful techniques for theater desegregation, or any one of forty people interested in the establishment of local public agencies in their cities.

Sometimes we suspect that the answer is readily available, but where? Who do we call or what referral can we suggest? It takes time to track this down.

Other times we are all but certain that no one has yet researched the subject. It exists in uncompiled material, in unread ordinances or annual reports. Who will do the research or the survey? It takes time to ferret out these facts.

This is all by way of an elaborate introduction to the report that NAIRO is seeking funds to establish an informational services program -- with a staff person who will (1) survey all existing resources, for referral of those queries that can be answered readily elsewhere, and (2) do the research necessary to answer the inquiries that cannot be referred.

If we get the grant and establish this program, we will cheerfully tackle your toughest questions. In the meantime, we welcome them as an indication of the field's informational needs, but apologize in advance for our inability to give to most the time that it requires to find an answer....

CRISIS!! DOLLAR DEARTH NAGS NAIRO

An acute financial crisis was recognized officially by NAIRO's Board of Directors at its meeting in Cincinnati late last month. "Despite the use of our carefully accumulated cash reserve, we will not have funds to operate at our present scale through 1960 -- unless we find new sources of income or can increase the revenue anticipated from existing sources," declared NAIRO president FREDERICK ROUTH.

Comparison of the budget for 1958 (NAIRO's first full year of staffed operation) with that for 1960 showed "remarkable" progress toward administrative self-support -- but also pointed up the present dilemma. In 1958, income from membership dues and publication sales accounted for less than 20% of a $30,000 budget; in 1960, the same sources are expected to produce over 40% of a budget now increased to $37,000. The difference? In 1958, administrative portions of internship grants from foundations amounted to $25,000; in 1960, to date, foundation grants have amounted to only $2,500.

To cope with the crisis and head off program cutbacks, the Board voted: (a) to initiate approaches to national intergroup relations agencies, labor unions, corporations, and individuals; (b) to step up development of pending projects that might merit foundation support; (c) to push the sale of JOURNAL subscriptions; and (d) to solicit members' help in a special membership drive.

Noted President ROUTH, "At our present rate of growth in publication sales and membership, we can expect to be self-supporting by 1964. Unfortunately, we cannot afford to grow normally, but must work now to speed up that process."

"WHAT CAN I DO?"

Every NAIRO member received a letter this month asking urgently for help in an "Each One Get One" membership drive. As noted therein, a doubled membership will (a) solve NAIRO's present financial problems, (b) move NAIRO two years' closer to self-support, and (c) increase NAIRO's voice and effectiveness as the field's professional association.

MEMBERSHIP TODAY: 642 SEPTEMBER 1 GOAL: 1,284

WILL YOU ENROLL YOUR NEW MEMBER(S) TODAY????????

Second major growth area is that of subscriptions to THE JOURNAL OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS. NAIRO's subsidy will amount to $7,975 in 1960; income to date from non-member subscriptions and sales is less than $3,000. (A subscription to the JOURNAL is included in membership dues.) NAIRO members are urged to encourage libraries, schools and colleges, agencies, Board members and other interested individuals, and community institutions to subscribe now to the JOURNAL at $6.00 per year. (On request, subscriptions will begin with Volume I, Number 1.)

SUBSCRIBERS TODAY: 275 SEPTEMBER 1 GOAL: 1,100

WILL YOU GET YOUR NEW SUBSCRIBERS TODAY????????

Note: Members joining now will receive copies of all NAIRO publications issued in 1960, including the first two issues of the JOURNAL. ./.

NEW DUES DEADLINE SET

In a move independent of the financial crisis but likely to effect some needed economies, the Board voted to establish a new dues deadline. Effective this year, members who have not paid current dues by July 1st will be dropped from the membership roster and mailing list.

(Until the Board took this action, delinquent members were carried for fifteen months! Some, for example, who had last paid dues in 1958 were not dropped until March of 1960. In many cases, these members had no intention of renewing their memberships, but had never indicated this and had never resigned. The new deadline was recommended to the Board by Membership Chairman FRANCES COUSENS and by the executive secretary.)

IF YOU HAVE NOT YET PAID 1960 DUES, YOU RECENTLY RECEIVED A WARNING LETTER AND A BILL. PLEASE ACT NOW TO AVOID INTERRUPTION OF YOUR MEMBERSHIP, YOUR JOURNAL SUBSCRIPTION, AND OTHER MAILINGS!

1960 CONFERENCE PLANS JELL

Said a NAIRO Board member to VIRGINIA COFFEY (Mayor's Friendly Relations Committee, Cincinnati), 1960 Conference Chairman, "Say, where is this year's meeting being held?"

Replied the shocked Conference Chairman:

"CINCINNATI, OHIO! NETHERLAND HILTON HOTEL!! NOVEMBER 15-18th!!!"

(Members, please take note! An early July mailing will bring further details....)

* * * * *

Meanwhile, back in New York, DAVID DANZIG (American Jewish Committee), 1960 Conference Program Chairman, announced his committee's choice of theme and major topics. Speakers are now being invited.

Theme: Intergroup Relations in the Changing World...Nation...Community.

Major Topics: The Changing Status of Racial Groups
The Changing Status of Religious Groups
The Changing Practice of Intergroup Relations
The Changing City

Also scheduled: discussion groups around major topics; Commission and Department meetings; a special event; the Banquet, with major speaker; business meetings; the President's Reception. Details will follow.

FIRST NAIRO CHAPTERS CHARTERED

To Philadelphia and Chicago went the honor of qualifying for the first official NAIRO Chapter charters, granted by the Board at its Cincinnati meeting. Probably NAIRO's oldest and most active groups, both qualified by presenting - in writing - definition of their Chapter area, a set of local By-Laws, and the signatures of a minimum of five (5) charter members.

HAROLD W. MC COO (Parkside Community Branch YMCA) chairs the Philadelphia Chapter, and RAPHAEL O. LEWIS (Chicago Urban League) is chairman of the Chicago Chapter.

Reported at various stages of organization are potential Chapters in: Detroit, New York, Pittsburgh, San Francisco, Boston, Los Angeles, and Minneapolis-St. Paul. Local professional groups in several other communities are considering application for NAIRO Chapter status.

PRESIDENT ROUTH ON TOUR

President ROUTH set precedent for future NAIRO executives with a presidential tour of the West Coast this Spring. His two-week, 5,000-mile trip covered Seattle, Portland, Denver, San Francisco, and Los Angeles -- with sixteen speeches and countless informal talks en route. New members, new friends, and extensive publicity for NAIRO followed in his wake.

Tour plans were made by Southwest Regional Chairman HELEN E. AMERMAN (Oakland Redevelopment Agency) and Northwest Regional Chairman LOUISE BLACKHAM (Seattle Civic Unity Committee), with the energetic help of JOHN BINKLEY (Colorado Anti-Discrimination Commission, Denver) and JOHN BUGGS (Los Angeles County Commission on Human Relations).

NAIRO REGIONAL CONFERENCES LAUNCHED

Eighty key professionals turned out for the Middle South regional conference on May 6 at the Willard Hotel in Washington, D.C. Under the theme, "Forward to Full Citizenship: What Are Your Next Steps?," participants from the District and five states heard and discussed speeches by HERMAN LONG (Race Relations Department, Fisk University), Dumont Kenny (National Conference of Christians and Jews, New York City), HAROLD FLEMING (Southern Regional Council, Atlanta), and Raymond Larson (U.S. Department of Labor).

> Correction: Conference Chairman SAMUEL B. DANLEY was identified erroneously in the last NEWSLETTER; he is an Organization and Methods Analyst in the U. S. Department of Labor.

Another eighty professional workers gathered from six states for the Great Lakes regional conference at the University of Toledo on June 11th and 12th. "Decade Ahead" talks by FREDERICK ROUTH (Michigan FEPC), SHELTON GRANGER (Cleveland Urban League), Clifford Campbell (Deputy Commissioner, Chicago Department of City Planning), Philip Jacobson (National Community Relations Advisory Council), the Rev. C. Umhau Wolf (St. Paul's Lutheran Church, Toledo), and Dr. Gordon Zahn (Loyola University, Chicago) drew stimulated discussion.

> ABRAHAM CITRON (Jewish Community Council, Detroit) was Conference Chairman; subcommittees were headed by CHARLES LIVERMORE (Chicago Commission on Youth Welfare), FRANK W. FAGER (Toledo Board of Community Relations), MARGARET GARRITY (President's Committee on Government Contracts), WALTER R. GREENE, JR. (Michigan FEPC), and SAMUEL J. SIMMONS (Michigan Labor Mediation Board).
> Delegates voted to hold the second Great Lakes regional conference at the Merrill-Palmer School in Detroit, in June, 1961. ./.

Meanwhile, from WADE MACKIE (American Friends Service Committee, Baton Rouge), Regional Chairman, comes word of plans for a South Central regional conference in Little Rock next November.

Northeast Regional Chairman EMANUEL MURAVCHIK (Jewish Labor Committee) reports formation of a regional Committee on Fundamental Issues. First two meetings in New York City were devoted to a discussion of issues underlying "benign quotas" and were based on a paper prepared by Dr. DAN DODSON (New York University Center for Human Relations).

COMMISSION APPOINTMENTS ANNOUNCED

* NAIRO's Commission on Manpower Utilization will be headed by Dr. JOHN HOPE, II (Race Relations Department, Fisk University, Nashville).

* NAIRO's Commission on Interreligious Relations will be chaired by the Rev. Will Campbell (Race Relations Department, National Council of Churches, Nashville).

COMMITTEE TO SURVEY PROFESSIONAL ETHICS

The Board has named a special committee to survey and study the entire question of professional ethics and standards as they relate to professional status, reputation, livelihood, and job tenure. The new body was instructed to report to the Board with recommendations of areas in which NAIRO should take an active interest, of governing policy, and of procedure.

JOHN MORSELL (NAACP, New York City) will chair the committee. Named as members were: JOSEPH MONSERRAT (Commonwealth of Puerto Rico Migration Division, New York City), LOUIS RADELET (NCCJ, New York), PAUL KLEIN, IRVING GOLDABER (New York City Commission on Intergroup Relations), and THEODORE LESKES (American Jewish Committee).

Action grew out of continuing complaints of violation of professional ethics or standards, or both, in job dismissals and appointments. Lacking both policy and procedure to govern investigation and action in such cases, NAIRO has been unable to deal with these.

1962 CONFERENCE SITE SELECTED

The Board of Directors accepted the invitation of Washington, D.C. to hold NAIRO's Sixteenth Annual Conference in that city, in November, 1962. The bid was submitted by DAVID SAWYER (Commissioners' Council on Human Relations), on behalf of the District Commissioners and of local professionals.

(As voted and announced last year, the 1961 Conference will be held in San Francisco. Dates: November 7-10, 1961).

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS COMMITTEE AT WORK

NAIRO's Committee on International Relations has proposed a year-long survey of intergroup relations tensions, problems, and approaches throughout the world. The final report would be given wide circulation here and abroad, and would form the basis for an international conference on intergroup relations work, projected for 1963. If the project receives NAIRO Board approval, the Committee will seek foundation support.

FRANK LOESCHER (U.S.-South Africa Leadership Exchange Program) chairs the committee, with the following members: ARNOLD ARONSON (National Community Relations Advisory Council), EDWARD RUTLEDGE (New York SCAD), DAVID DANZIG (American Jewish Committee), MARGARET GARRITY (President's Committee on Government Contracts), WILLIAM GREMLEY (Cleveland Community Relations Board), JOSEPH MONSERRAT (Commonwealth of Puerto Rico Migration Division), JAMES MADISON (National Recreation Association), Max Wolff (Commonwealth of Puerto Rico Migration Division), and Tartt Bell (American Friends Service Committee).

MAIL BALLOT APPROVED FOR 1960

Election of officers, directors, and Nominating Committee will again be conducted by mail ballot in 1960. The Board voted acceptance of the mail ballot recommendation presented by Nominating Committee chairman BOOKER T. MC GRAW (Housing and Home Finance Agency, Washington, D.C.).

Following procedure instituted last year, the Nominating Committee will circulate its official slate in early September. Opportunity will then be given for nomination by petition (signed by any three members in good standing) of additional candidates. Official ballots will be mailed out in early October, and results will be announced at the meeting in Cincinnati.

SPECIAL INQUIRY PROPOSED

An inquiry into "Intergroup Relations and the Public Interest" has been proposed to the NAIRO Board by the Special Interdisciplinary Committee headed by Dr. EDWARD OLSEN (NCCJ, Chicago). As outlined, the year-long survey would follow lines developed by Dr. Wayne A.R. Leys (Dean of the Graduate Division, Roosevelt University, Chicago) in a recent Rockefeller Foundation project, "Philosophy and the Public Interest."

Focus would be on the interrelationship of majority, minority, and individual rights -- in the intergroup relations context -- and on some of the specific questions raised by the expanding regulatory role of government in the area of civil rights ("Is there any conflict between civil rights laws and individual civil liberties?").

The Board will consider the proposal at its September 16-17 meeting.

Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Foundation Supports NAIRO Intern Training Program

The Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Foundation has made grants to NAIRO totaling $127,500.00 in support of NAIRO's Intern Training Program. NAIRO has used the money to grant $2,500 to each Intern; this amount is matched by the agency to which an Intern is assigned, making the annual stipend $5,000 for each Intern.

Last Fall, the NAIRO Board established a Career Service Board to supervise a re-activated intern training program. Dr. Herman Long, President of Talladega College and former NAIRO President, was asked and agreed to serve as Chairman. Other persons who agreed to serve on the Career Service Board are: Alexander J. Allen, Arnold Aronson, John Buggs, Dr. Martin P. Chworowsky, Oscar Cohen, George Culberson, David Danzig, Dr. Dan Dodson, John G. Feild, Harold Fleming, K. C. Jones, Jr., Mrs. Charlotte Meachem, Mr. Edwin Lukas, Dr. John Morsell, Dr. Samuel Nabrit, Mrs. Louis Reisenstein, Frederick Routh, Edward Rutledge, George Schermer, Don Slaiman, Mrs. Betti Whaley and John H. Wheeler.

The Institute on Human Relations of the American Jewish Committee, under a separate grant from the Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Foundation, provides a ten day intensive seminar for Interns at the beginning of their year's training. Max Birnbaum, AJC's Director of Training, serves as seminar leader. The Intern's travel and maintenance expenses for the seminar are provided for in the grant the Foundation made to AJC, as are the costs of staffing and materials preparation.

Today there are twenty-four Interns receiving on-the-job training with a wide variety of agencies. The Interns and their agency assignments follow:

Mark L. Alter, D.C. Commissioner's Council on Human Relations; Edith Barksdale, Encampment for Citizenship; George T. Bess, Urban League, S. E. Regional Office; Brereton W. Bissell, New Haven Human Relations Council; Toye L. Brown, Urban League of Greater N.Y.; James Clay, Kentucky Commission on Human Rights; William P. Condo, N.Y. City Commission on Human Rights; Sam J. Dennis, Catholic Interracial Council, Chicago; Elinor Dobbins, N.Y. State Education Department; John Due, Jr., Southern Voter Educ. Project, SRC; Nancy Dyer, Urban League of St. Louis; Joan Franklin, NAACP Legal Defense Fund; Constance Garcia, Urban League of Greater N.Y.; James M. Gilbreth, Missouri State Human Rights Commission; Martin E. Henner, American Jewish Committee, Philadelphia; Doris Jordan, Neighbors, Inc. (D.C.); Charles S. Kamen, Jewish Labor Committee; Karen Krueger, Urban League of Greater, N.Y.; Amy W. Paige, U.S. Civil Rights Commission; Kenneth R. Rashid, Univ. Neighborhood Council (D.C.); Eugene Solon, Industrial Union Department, AFL-CIO; Sue Turnbull, Chicago Urban League; Roland Yaeger, Monroe County (N.Y.) Human Relations Commission; and Marv Zommick, The Urban League of Philadelphia.

The process of selecting twenty-five more Interns and an equal number of agency assignments is underway. Nathan Greene has been employed for a three to four months period to coordinate this phase of the program. Plans now call for the ten day seminar for this second class of Interns to be held starting August 27th; this second group of Interns will report to their agency assignments early in September.

It is hoped that this Intern Training Program will continue for at least two additional years and that we will bring fifty newly qualified persons into the field each year. The need for trained and qualified personnel has reached the crisis stage; we are indebted to the Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Foundation for its wisdom in understanding this fact and for its generosity in providing the funds necessary to its solution.

LESKES MEMORIAL FUND ESTABLISHED Ted Leskes, long-time NAIRO legal counsel and Director of the Legal Department of the American Jewish Committee, died last winter. Joe Allen, NAIRO President, said "WE have lost a valued friend, our field has lost a valiant leader; the brilliance, the leadership, and the warmth of Ted Leskes will be sorely missed by us all." A memorial fund has been established at Ted's undergraduate school, CCNY, to create an annual award to the student who demonstrates unusual promise in the field of civil rights. Contributions made out to the Theodore Leskes Memorial Fund, may be sent to Louis Levy, Trustee of the Theodore Leskes Memorial Fund, 261 DeVoe Avenue, Yonders, N.Y.

PRESIDENT'S CORNER This is my first message, other than my Inauguration Address, to you since becoming President of our Association. It is much later than any of us would wish but time has flown these last few months and I wanted it in the Newsletter. Hopefully the Newsletter will now be put out on a monthly basis.

Much has happened since I took office at our Annual Meeting in Cleveland, during those tragic days in late November. I need not tell you what the headlines of the nation's dailies have told the world about progress and retrogression in human rights in our nation and abroad.

I would, however, speak of the progress that NAIRO has made in recent months; it would not be accurate or fair to claim credit for all that has been accomplished for much of our progress rests on the previous leadership of NAIRO: on Ed Rutledge, Lloyd Davis, George Culberson and further back; much of it rests, too, on hard working Board Members and staff.

Several things seem of unusual merit. As is reported elsewhere in this issue of the Newsletter, we have reinstituted a major Intern Training Program; thanks to the Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Foundation we now have 24 Interns training on-the-job; by September, 25 more will be at their agency assignments. This is of great significance to our field.

The special Issue of the Journal of Intergroup Relations, "Public School Segregation and Integration in the North" has proved a valuable report to civil rights and school administrators who want to correct inequities in their school systems. This was prepared by NAIRO's Commission on School Integration; even though many extra copies were printed, the supply was quickly exhausted and more had to be secured.

The Special Report: "A Memorandum to Municipalities: Guidelines for Municipal Human Relations Committees" prepared by an Ad Hoc Committee, chaired by Galen Martin, has wide-spread acceptance in the Border States and Mid-South as well as in the rest of the nation. More than 2,000 copies have been sold to date. We are sending you a copy with this Newsletter.

The arrangements have been made, again as reported in this issue, to reissue the Directory of Intergroup Relations Agencies with Paid Professional Staff. Brotherhood-in-Action and faculty of the University Michigan School of Social Work are cooperating in this effort.

Staff and NAIRO members are in constant communication with federal officials as new plans are developed and as new efforts are undertaken. Cooperation is developing with those who are planning the direction and staffing of the Community Relations Service and the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission.

Our Association continues to grow; 85 new members have joined our ranks since the last Annual Meeting.

CODE OF CONDUCT

The following is a Code of Conduct suggested by Carl T. Rowan, Director of the United States Information Agency (USIA), on "Youth Night" at the 1964 Annual NAACP Convention, held in Washington,D.C.

"1. I shall so conduct myself and my protest efforts that no one can ever justly say that I exhibited less dignity, less responsibility, less self-respect than the Civil Rights Law of 1964 embodies and seeks to protect.

"2. Not only shall I oppose those who inject violence and hooliganism into the civil rights struggle to the great discredit of those who have sacrificed in a dignified way, but I shall not attempt to use this law to stir up trouble for the mere fact of proving that trouble is still easy to find.

"3. At the same time, I shall regard seriously the guarantees of human rights included in this law, so I shall not accept racial indignities and discriminations in meek silence. In the normal course of acting like a full-fledged American citizen, I shall challenge, and ask my government to deal with, all who violate this new law.

"4. I shall not be unmindful of the limitations of law, or of the role of the private citizen, in promoting social change. So I shall so strive toward excellence that I shall be regarded as an asset to the law and its implementation, just as I expect the law to be an asset to me."

INTERGROUP DIRECTORY TO BE RE-ISSUED The Directory of Intergroup Relations Agencies with professional personnel, last issued in 1959 will be reissued this Fall. This is a cooperative undertaking with staff from Brotherhood-in-Action, University of Michigan School of Social Work and NAIRO participating. We need information about agencies in your area, particularly new agencies—those which have come into being since 1958 when the last compilation was made for the '59 Directory. Please send information to: Miss Janet Ross, Brotherhood-in-Action, 560 7th Ave. New York, N.Y. 10018. Your cooperation is urgently requested.

Finally, NAIRO is back in the black financially; all our debts have been paid; we have a modest balance in the bank. The Field Foundation, after giving NAIRO a $5,000 grant in 1962, gave us a three year grant of $7,500 for each of the next three years. The Taconic Foundation has again given us a grant of $7,500; the Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Foundation is providing funds to administer the Intern Training Program—in addition to the $125,000 they gave for Interns.

Thus far, it has been an exciting and challenging time to be NAIRO President; with the help of your Officers, the Board and staff I promise you continued efforts to make our Association significant.

THE DIRECTOR'S BOX

The civil rights bill, passed by the House and Senate, and signed by the President, is now the law of the land. It would, therefore, seem the better part of wisdom to prepare our respective communities to accept and comply with the provisions of the bill, since it is now effective and must be enforced.

There are many areas of the country—North and West as well as South—where certain provisions in the bill are not in common practice. Many non-Southern states have public accommodations statutes which are not vigorously enforced because the mechanism is too cumbersome; no Southern state and few border states have such laws; the Federal Civil Rights Act of 1964 will bring far reaching changes. This is an area where the intergroup relations agencies can be of great service to the nation by preparing their communities to accept and obey the law.

"Inevitability" and "workability" were twin concepts found useful in working with Southern school administrators on desegregation. They should prove useful in the current situation for they are valid. State and city officials, business leaders and chambers of commerce, religious, labor and civic leaders have a stake in seeing that transition does not bring disorganization with it. They should be enlisted, wherever feasible, in preparing the community to accept and comply with the law.

It is to be anticipated that the direct action groups will "test" the policies of many establishments; communities should be prepared to accept this calmly—the role of interpreter is an important function of the intergroup relations agency. A community which anticipates such happenings and is aware of their legality is not apt to lose its head.

Experience in Louisville, Kentucky, indicates that cities with Southern exposures can peacefully resolve such problems in good faith compliance; restaurants in Atlanta and Charlotte have found that the roof doesn't fall in and regular customers do not stop patronizing their facilities when they are opened to all citizens. Other communities need to know this.

The other provisions of the Civil Rights Bill of 1964 will reach into many communities—again, both North and South. It empowers the Federal Government to speed school desegregation; it establishes an Equal Employment Opportunity Commission; it strengthens the right to register and vote; it makes possible, not mandatory, the withholding of federal funds from states not in compliance with federal non-discrimination rulings and provisions. It would be wise for intergroup relations professionals to write their Congressmen to obtain a copy of the bill in its final form.

Again, it would be the better part of wisdom for intergroup relations professionals to acquaint their communities with these provisions of the bill and their likely implications for the local situation.

Following the 1954 Supreme Court school decision there was a lull in pro-enforcement activities; into this vacuum strode the opponents. There is a heavy responsibility on the part of intergroup relations professionals to see that this is not repeated. We must rely on the government agencies to enforce the law but intergroup relations agencies are uniquely equipped to help build a climate of public opinion wherein the law is understood and accepted as another step toward bringing common practice closer to constitutional promise: A free society in which the rights of the individual are sacred and where equal opportunity for all citizens is practised.

DIRECTOR'S ACTIVITIES Fred Routh has been busy on a wide front since the last issue of the NAIRO Newsletter. Much of his time had been spent on the Intern Training Program, servicing the Career Service Board, and counselling with members on career changes and advancement. More than eighty members have been by the office to confer on opportunities; the number of letters is double that.

Visits have been made to Chapters or NAIRO Groups in Atlanta, Los Angeles, Louisville, Los Angeles, New York and Washington, D. C.

Consultations have been held with staff of the U.S. Post Office Department, State Department, Labor Department, and the President's Committee on Equal Opportunity in Housing. Also with the Human Relations Committee of the D.C. School System, the Southern Interagency Conference, National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing, United Auto Workers, the US Conference of Mayors and the Washington School of Psychiatry.

Conferences have been attended or participated in with Buffalo School of Law, Conference of Commissions on Human Rights, Episcopal Society for Cultural & Racial Unity, National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice.

PENNY WRIGHT JOINS NAIRO STAFF Mrs. Penelope (Thomas) Wright has joined the NAIRO staff as Secretary and Administrative Assistant. She brings to the job experience with the American Civil Liberties Union and the America-Israel Society. Penny replaces Jane Leeds who tragically died the end of last year.

CLEARING HOUSE ON JEWISH SUBJECTS IS ESTABLISHED The YIVO Institute for Jewish Research, 1048 Fifth Avenue, N.Y. 28, N.Y., has established a clearing house and index to Jewish subjects in current American humanistic and social research. Cooperating scholars will receive an annual list of studies registered with the clearinghouse.

RACE RELATIONS NEWSLETTER FOR BUSINESSMEN David Apter & Associates of 1145 19th St., NW, Washington, D. C. 20036—will soon offer a newsletter to give factual up-to-the-minute information to policy-making executives; personnel, public relations, and advertising directors; trade associations and chambers of commerce. Assisting Mr. Apter is Evelyn Merson Idelson, long-time NAIRO member and former editor of Trends in Housing.

NAIRO OFFICES AIR CONDITIONED Thanks to the generosity of the Washington NAIRO Chapter, the national offices are air-conditioned. The Washington Chapter held two fund raising functions and presented sufficient funds to NAIRO to air-condition the offices. National staff members are deeply grateful and promise increased productivity over last summer in return for this considerate act.

NATHAN GREENE COORDINATES NAIRO INTERN PROGRAM Nate Greene (Bob's brother) has come with NAIRO to coordinate the second round of the Intern Training Program. He is performing the function which John Feild so ably did for round one Interns and agencies. This is a three to four month assignment and NAIRO was fortunate to find a person with Greene's background available for a temporary position.

NAIRO WATCHING FEDERAL PROGRAM DEVELOPMENTS The national office of NAIRO is in touch with federal officials responsible for developing and staffing the Community Relations Service and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission provided for in the civil rights bill. NAIRO members will be advised as plans unfold.

EACH ONE, GET ONE CAMPAIGN OPENS We are anxious to expand the out-reach of NAIRO; perhaps the best way that this may be done is through a membership which encompasses the majority of those who work in the field of intergroup relations. We have decided on a new approach to this effort: enclosed with this issue of the Newsletter is a membership application form. Please take it to a friend who is not now a member of your Association and solicit his or her membership. We need new members and we need YOU to get them.

NEW NAIRO CHAPTERS Congratulations are in order to those who brought about the formation of three new NAIRO Chapters in recent months. The new chapters and their respective chairmen are: Connecticut State Chapter, Lloyd Davis, Chairman; Louisville & Kentucky Chapter, Robert Jones, Chairman; Massachusetts State Chapter, Muriel Snowden, Chairman.

EIGHTEENTH ANNUAL NAIRO CONFERENCE

THOUGHT FOR THE MONTH "To every man his chance, to every man, regardless of his birth, his shining golden opportunity—to every man the right to live, to work, to be himself, and to become whatever his manhood and his vision can combine to make him—this, seeker, is the promise of America."—Thomas Wolfe.

Study of Discrimination in Respect of the Right of Everyone to Leave Any Country, Including His Own, and to Return to His Country, U.N., Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, (Jose D. Ingles, Special Rapporteur) (E/CN.4/Sub.2/222 Rev. 1)

It is ironical that passports and visas, intended to facilitate travel, have become national instruments obstructing international passages. Furthermore, it is a comprehensible but bothersome paradox that an era in which world travel is the order of the day is also witness to the containment of people behind national boundaries in greater numbers than the world has ever known.

While in large measure this U.N. report (and the draft principles it contains) is necessarily focused on a consensus not easily obtained—and is based upon generally bland working papers—it makes some telling points and recommendations of substance. The study, first of all, makes clear that while it is significant to note that some 50 countries do not expressly recognize the individual's right to travel, the true measure of liberty in travel is in the application of the law. In practice, racial and religious discrimination pose the expected problems—but the report singles out the NCDH GETS NEW STAFF Appointment of Edward Rutledge as Executive Director and Jack E. Wood, Jr., as Associate Executive Director of the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing was announced Sept. 16.

The announcement heralded a reorganization and expansion of the 15-year-old private agency's efforts, in cooperation with its 37 member organizations, to achieve equal opportunity in housing. The committee is an affiliation of major religious, civil rights, labor and civic agencies, and a new, enlarged program is expected to be announced early next month

Ed Rutledge served as Housing Director of the New York State Commission for Human Rights for the past nine years and has more than 20 years' experience in state and Federal agencies dealing with problems of intergroup relations in housing, urban renewal, migration and employment. He is Chairman of the NAIRO Commission on Housing and Urban Life and is immediate past President of our association. He served as co-Chairman of the Ford Foundation-supported Princeton Conference on Equal Opportunity in Housing sponsored by the National Housing Center and NAIRO.

Jack Wood, new Associate Executive Director of NCDH, formerly served as Director of Housing for the New York City Commission on Human Rights; during his association with the city Commission, its housing program was expanded to permit acceptance and referral of housing complaints by local civil rights agencies and to encourage their efforts to advance residential integration. Prior to his association with the Commission, Mr. Wood served as National Housing Secretary for NAACP.

FEDERAL SERVICE ENTRANCE EXAMS Quite a number of young people who applied for the NAIRO Intern Program did not know about the Federal Service Entrance Examinations for management internships. There are a number of openings in the Federal Service which may be of interest to someone you know. To take the examination persons must fill out Application Card Form 5000-AB (obtainable from U.S. Post Offices). Applications must be received by: For tests given on:

October 22, 1964	November 21, 1964
December 17, 1964	January 16, 1965
January 21, 1965	February 20, 1965

A List of Civil Service Offices where the applications should be filed may be obtained from U.S. Civil Service Commission, Washington, D.C. 20415. They also supply a list of cities where the tests will be given.

COMMUNITY RELATIONS SERVICE US COMMERCE DEPARTMENT The Civil Rights Act of 1964 created a Community Relations Service within the US Commerce Department. Director of the new service is LeRoy Collins, former Governor of Florida; Harold C. Fleming, member of NAIRO's Executive Committee and Board, is Acting Deputy Director. Dr. John A. Griffin (formerly of Florida State University and Board Member of the Southern Regional Council) heads the Conciliation Division of the Community Relations Service. Seymour Samet (formerly with the Miami Office of the American Jewish Committee and South-East Regional NAIRO Chairman) serves on the professional staff. Many NAIRO members and NAIRO's Executive Director recently attended the first meeting of the National Citizens' Advisory Committee to the Community Relations Service. The meeting was held August 18th at the Department of State and program participants included three Cabinet Officers: Robert F. Kennedy, Attorney General; Luther Hodges, Secretary of Commerce; and Willard Wirtz, Secretary of Labor. The group was later received by the President in the Rose Garden of the White House. The President spoke of his hope for a just and orderly society and said that the efforts of the Community Relations Service and its National Citizens Advisory Committee would make a contribution to its attainment.

CONFERENCE OF MAYORS The U.S. Conference of Mayors, under a grant from the Ford Foundation, has established a Community Relations Service. Director of this new service is John G. Feild, a Past President of NAIRO and former Executive Director of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity and the Michigan FEPC. Among the first activities of the CRS was a survey of the 589 cities with a population of 30,000 or more to ascertain what had been done in establishing local public human relations committees and commissions. One training session for northern mayors and their commission personnel has been held; one for their southern counterparts is planned. A reporting service, available to mayors, has been created to provide them with "comprehensive up-to-date information on the local community relations committees and commissions that have been established. . . ." Officers of the Community Relations Service are: Herman Goldner, Mayor of St. Petersburg, Florida, Chairman; Jerome Cavanaugh, Mayor of Detroit, Michigan, Vice-Chairman; and Sam Massell, Vice Mayor of Atlanta, Georgia, Secretary. Nine other mayors constitute the Board of CRS.

denial of passports based on the expression of political and other opinions as the most prevalent discriminatory factor. While these factors are discriminatory as applied, they are usually couched in terms of "non-discriminatory" travel policies. Where any reason is given at all, the pure and buttressing interest relied upon most frequently is that of "national security" or "public emergency".

The interrelationship of the freedom of travel to other human rights serves to underscore the practical relevance of this study to the current American constitutional colloquy on the right to travel. The Supreme Court tends to view travel as one of the premises of a free society; HUAC apparently believes that it exposes a weak ideological flank of the American populace. While the currently propounded international standards of human rights do not generally place a great burden upon our constitutional strictures —usually for reasons which speak well of us, sometimes because international law asks too little—there is still a need for American introspection. We should not blithely presume, even in the country which has most forthrightly converted its libertarian impulses into law, that in every instance we shall not be found wanting by the less sophisticated measure of an international yardstick.

In this study, Mr. Ingles suggests that a passport refusal upon grounds of national security is justifiable only when an objectionable action of the individual is punishable by law, and a prosecution is actually in progress. Furthermore, a "public emergency" may be invoked only when the life of the nation is threatened—and that, by dint of international practice, emergencies are temporary in nature.

NATHAN GREENE

TO BE EQUAL This is an important new book by Whitney M. Young, Jr., Executive Director of the National Urban League. To Be Equal sets forth a program of "special effort" now called for if the inequities of the past are to be overcome; it is not a demand for reparation. It offers guidelines to problem solving in employment, education, housing, health and welfare and democratic leadership. The book is an expansion of Mr. Young's theme presented at the 1963 NAIRO Conference. Published by McGraw-Hill, it sells for $5.00.

BUFFALO U's LAW REVIEW A special "Conference Issue: Toward Equal Opportunity in Employment" has been issued by the Buffalo Law Review. Among NAIRO members contributing to the issue were: George Culberson, John G. Feild, Madison S. Jones, Sol Rabkin, Joseph Robison and Fred Routh. Other contributors well known to NAIRO included Clyde Ferguson, Herbert Hill, and Henry Spitz. The Special Issue, Fall 1964, Vol. 14, No. 1, deals with the "Role of State and Local Government."

FAIR HOUSING HANDBOOK OUT A highly useful Handbook has been published by the American Friends Service Committee and the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing. It is billed as "A practical manual for those who are working to create and maintain inclusive communities." Price is 50¢ per single copy or 35¢ for orders of 100 or more. It is available from the NCDH 323 Lexington Ave., N.Y., N.Y. 10016.

PREDICAMENT OF DEMOCRATIC MAN In what has been described as a "stinging" book, the late Edmond Cahn, Professor of Law at New York University, says the "new predicament of democratic man is his moral involvement in the misdeeds of government." Every Intergrouper, every small "d" democrat would profit from reading it. Published by the Dell Publishing Co., it is available in paperback at $1.65.

NORTH CAROLINA AND THE NEGRO This book, published by the North Carolina Mayors' Co-operating Committee, recounts how the cities of North Carolina moved toward equality of opportunity "when they were confronted by the organized revolt of Negroes against segregation which denied them citizenship equality." All the events took place before the passage of the 1964 Civil Rights Act but much of what was done then still needs to be done now with even greater urgency. $2.00 from the N.C. Mayors' Cooperating Committee. Box 2539, Raleigh, N.C. 27602.

PROSPECTS The League of Women Voters has issued a study guide entitled "Prospects For Education and Employment" as the first material for use by their members as they study the program adopted at their 1964 National Convention, "Development of Human Resources: Evaluation of Policies and Programs in the United States to Provide For All Persons Equality of Opportunity For Education and Employment." Available at 40¢ from the LWV, 1026 17th St. N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036.

NEW VOTER EDUCATION FILM, "RIGHT NOW!" A new documentary, "RIGHT NOW", which has been used in the voter education campaigns in the South and is credited with helping to register 500,000 Negroes, is available.

Made in Savannah, Georgia, it shows in candid close-ups how responsible Negroes went about the task of convincing Negro non-voters that they had a stake in registering to vote.

The 28-1/2 minute, "RIGHT NOW!" is immediately available in 16mm color to community groups for purchase or rental, and to television for licensing from Brandon Films, Inc., 200 West 57th St., New York 19, N.Y.

PRESIDENT'S CORNER This is my last chance before the Annual Convention to be in touch with you. I will outline at the Conference my year's stewardship as your president. I would like to say something now about the field of intergroup relations.

We stand at the end of a long, hot summer in which there has been violence both in the North and in the South; a summer in which the pollsters and the news media have talked about the "white backlash;" a season when race relations has been injected into the national political arena as never before. Despite these and other difficulties, I see no reason for intergroup relations workers to be dismayed—though we can hardly be sanguine or complacent. There is a challenge in our time not always open to other generations; there is an opportunity, not always available.

The tensions of the past summer have come about because old myths and outmoded ways are being challenged—tension is the inevitable companion of change. As a people we have come to learn the difference between orderly demonstrations and ugly disruptions. The former can lead to progress; the latter, while caused by deep frustrations at inequities, are dangerous shoals blocking the course of progress. So long as progress in sufficient rapidity and scope is made, mass violence is unlikely. What we have witnessed this summer is not, in the regular sense, interracial conflict—rather it is frustrated people striking out blindly, unlawfully, foolishly against situations which they feel have thwarted their rightful ambitions to dignity and decency. To prevent recurrences there must be visible progress toward the attainment of dignity and decency; we do not accept or acquiese in what has taken place but we know better now what brought it about; and this knowledge can assist us in moving ahead in such a manner as to make less likely it happening again. Intergroup relations agencies, both private and governmental, must re-examine their programs to determine ways to better meet the urgency of today.

The highly touted "white backlash" seems to be a better organized and more vociferous expression of threatened suburbanites and insecure urban-dwellers rather than something radically new on the scene.

DIRECTOR'S BOX

The number of employment opportunities for intergroup relations professionals continues to expand within the federal establishment. The Civil Rights Act created the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and a Community Relations Service within the Department of Commerce. The anti-poverty legislation created the Job Corps which will make use of community and intergroup relations specialists. The NAIRO office has been in touch with all three programs and has referred prospective professional staff personnel to two of them. The EEO Commission is not yet operative, its Commissioners have not been named, its buget not yet appropriated . . . but we are keeping in touch with the situation.

Most intergroup relations professionals think of employment opportunities within the ten Departments or agencies which have major responsibilities in the area of intergroup relations: the Air Force Equal Employment Opportunity Program, the Army Equal Employment Opportunity Program, the Civil Rights Commission, the Civil Rights Division of the Justice Department, the new Community Relations Service the Commerce Department, the new Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, the Navy Equal Employment Opportunity Program, the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, the President's Committee on Equal Opportunity in the Armed Forces, and the President's Committee on Equal Opportunity in Housing. However, many intergroup relations specialist now serve with other Departments or agencies within the federal establishment. The Post Office Department, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, the State Department and the Housing and Home Finance Agency all have sizable contingents of intergroup relations professionals. All Departments have a "compliance officer" whose responsibility it is to carry out the in-house intent of Executive Order 10925—to see to it that the government practices what it preaches. Still other intergroup relations professionals work in programs of contract compliance with a wide variety of agencies.

It may be anticipated that within the next two years some two hundred additional intergroup relations professionals will be employed by the Federal Government. Many will be recruited from state and municipal agencies and still others will come from the private agencies. Further, new state and municipal agencies will be created and many existing ones expanded in the same period. The need for replacements all up and down the line is self-evident. It is obvious also that there will be many opportunities for those now in junior staff positions to move up as the more experienced personnel get tapped for other service. The NAIRO-Eleanor Roosevelt Intern Traning Program will help supply new staff personnel at the entry or junior professional staff level but the field will experience a shortage of trained professional personnel at the middle—department, division, or program heads. An AJC-NAIRO Ad-Hoc Training Committee is developing a foundation proposal to underwrite a program which would help meet this critical need. We propose to bring persons from other related professions laterally into the field and give them several months of intensive professional training.

We are engaged in a field which is rapidly expanding; while this means increased opportunities, it can also mean increased dangers. The standards of professional practice and behavior, which have been so long and painstakingly developing, must be maintained and even raised. As one of our senior professionals said, after reflecting on this, "If NAIRO didn't exist, we would have to invent it; the need for professional standards in so rapidly expanding and changing a field is all too evident. The Association really serves an indispensable function."

DIRECTOR'S ACTIVITIES Fred Routh has spent a good deal of time on the Eleanor Roosevelt Interns in Human Rights Training Program; two weeks were spent sitting in with interview panels in New York, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Chicago, Washington and Atlanta. Three and a half more days went to the Intern Seminar at Tarrytown. A considerable amount of time and several trips to New York have been devoted to the Annual Conference Committee meetings. Meetings have been participated in called by the U.S. Department of State, the U.S. Department of Commerce, the Small Business Administration, and sessions have been held with staff from the American Friends Service Committee, the American Jewish Committee, Anti Defamation League, the Civil Rights Commission, the Encampment For Citizenship, the Episcopal Church, NAACP, National Urban League, Southern Regional Council. Considerable time has gone into career counselling with members and with others interested in entering the field of intergroup relations. Time has also been spent arranging for members to meet with appropriate federal officials.

KUDOS FOR PITTSBURGH The Wall Street Journal, for September 22nd, ran an article by Frederick C. Klein on "Riot Rumors." The report said that "talk of race trouble plagues a city that hasn't had any" but that the rumors were being run down and dispelled by alert action on the part of the Commission on Human Relations (Lou Mason is Exec.), the Police Department, and the NAACP and other local Negro and civic groups.

There have always been those who cried, "Too fast and too soon" at every step of progress of minorities. There have always been those who believed in segregated housing and schools. There have always been those who imagined their jobs in jeopardy when a mention of fair play was made. It seems to me that the danger is not so much from these frightened people, better organized and more clamorous though they may be. The danger is in the possibilities of contaminating or infecting reasonable citizens with the barrage of fear-propaganda now let loose upon the national scene. Again, intergroup relations agencies, both private and governmental, must devise ways to set the record straight. The aspirations of minority group persons must be seen for what they really are—no different from any one else. Legislation and litigation

On September 2, NAIRO's second group of Eleanor Roosevelt Human Rights Interns completed a 10-day Training Institute, held in Tarrytown, New York. The Institute, conducted by the American Jewish Committee under a grant from the Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Foundation, was designed to further the Interns' understanding of intergroup problems and to develop a greater insight of their individual attitudes toward these problems.

Max Birnbaum of AJC and Betti Whaley of the National Urban League led the Institute. Among the resource people whose skills contributed to the Institutes success were Whitney Young, Jr., Eric Lincoln, Charles Silberman, George Schermer, and John Feild. in this field must be honestly interpreted in layman's language—not hiding what they demand but dispelling false claims as to their contents. Rumors must be pursued and be exposed to the light of reality. Events, particularly ugly events must not be allowed to appear as isolated from all context—they must be interpreted and understood for what they really are.

As to race being used in the political arena, I believe we can count on the good sense of the American people; this nation really believes in the American Dream—and I do not feel it fuzzy minded patriotism to say so. Most Americans—including most southern whites—recognize the similarity between Hitler's boast of a herren-volk and the rancorous cry of white supremacy; most also remember what happened to the Nazi nation based on so invalid and undemocratic a theory. Again, while most intergroup relations agencies, governmental and private alike, cannot engage in partisan political activities we can keep before the American people an awareness of their own sense of fair play and a realization of the scourge of racism.

Let us come together at our 18th Annual Conference to learn together, to reason together, and to plan together. Seldom, if ever, have we come together at so propitious a time.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO NAIRO BY-LAWS

The NAIRO Executive Committee wishes to propose an amendment to the NAIRO By-Laws to strengthen the representativeness of the Nominating Committee. The current language of the appropriate section of the By-Laws provides for the election of one person from each of the ten Regions and for three more to be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Board. This has not worked out as well as had been hoped. Your Executive Committee, therefore, recommends that Chapter Chairmen serve in place of persons elected from each Region; we now have fifteen Chapters, they cover nearly 80% of our membership; their geographic spread is good: 5 on the East Coast; 6 in the Midwest; 2 on the West Coast; and 2 in the South.

The proposed amendment is to Article 9; Sec. 1; Para. 1 and reads:

"A Nominating Committee composed of the Chairman of each duly recognized NAIRO Chapter and three members appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Board, the duties of which shall be to nominate for presentation at the Annual Meeting or by mail ballot a slate of Officers and Directors, with at least one candidate for each vacancy. The Chairman of the Nominating Committee shall be named by the President from among its members."

We recognize that this is not a complete sentence; an introductory phrase to the Article, which does not need amending, makes it so. One last thought: John Binkley, 1964 Nominating Committee Chairman, concurs in this proposal.

This proposed Amendment will be voted upon at the forthcoming Annual Conference.

RE: Police-Community Relations Conference

As you probably know, NAIRO, through the Interprofessional Relations Committee of which I am chairman, has been attempting unsuccessfully for some time to arrange a conference on Police-Community Relations. Such a conference had in mind much more than a simple police training program and envisioned the possibility of building two-way understanding and cooperation on a year-round basis similar to what takes place in a school-community relations program when it operates properly. Our negotiations with the International Association of Chiefs of Police have fallen through and we are therefore now attempting to see whether we could develop a conference through the cooperation of the police chiefs and the intergroup agencies in a dozen or so of our key cities.

Do you feel that the police chief in your city would cooperate by designating two top policy officials to participate in a conference on a mutually convenient date?

The Police Commissioner in Philadelphia is already working with us in Philadelphia in the formulation of a Police-Community Relations program. Enclosed is a discussion memorandum which we are using which may suggest the kind of data that we should assemble in a dozen cities in order more intelligently to plan a conference. If we get reasonably affirmative responses from the cities we are now contacting, a joint committee of police and intergroup relations leaders would then attempt to work out all the details for a conference.

Please let us know as quickly as possible whether your city is likely to be interested in participating and please feel free to give us your very frank criticisms and suggestions.

Kind personal regards.

PHILADELPHIA FELLOWSHIP COMMISSION
COMMITTEE ON COMMUNITY TENSIONS

Discussion Memorandum of the proposed Police-Community Relations Program

October 13, 1953

During the past year there have been informal discussions of the need for coordinating various independent approaches to the Police Department and more importantly the urgency of working out a police-community relations program on a year-round basis which would build mutual understanding, trust and cooperation.

Philadelphia's population is one of the most rapidly changing in America. It has the largest percentage of Negroes in any Northern city. Almost every neighborhood is changing racially and religiously. Many white Philadelphians are entrenching themselves in the outskirts of Philadelphia or in the suburbs, and presumably will resist efforts by Negroes and others to move to such areas. Less than 500 new homes have been made available to Negroes during the past 10 years, and only about 5000 additional homes altogether have been occupied by Negroes during the same period despite a population increase of 150,000.

Many schools are becoming all Negro. Health and recreational facilities are also increasingly or almost completely used by Negroes. Business and professional clientele are changing rapidly.

All of these developments are likely to produce minor or serious tensions unless constructive plans and programs are carried out by all concerned groups including the Police Department.

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

1. What efforts are being made to build understanding and cooperation between the public and the Police Department and how can civic groups help?

2. Who is responsible for handling public relations for the Police Department?

3. What procedure is there for regularly exchanging views, experiences and needs between the police and civic groups?

4. What program is there for developing constructive, cooperative relationships between police precincts and neighborhood groups such as Parent-Teacher Associations, Community Councils, Business Association, Churches, etc.?

5. Does the Police Department issue any publications or hold any conferences which civic groups might utilize to promote understanding? Can the needs and views of the Police Department be presented to or through civic groups?

6. How is the Police Department kept informed of civil rights developments generally throughout the United States and specifically of the relationships between police and various racial or religious groups especially in large cities?

7. What is the nature of the human relations training presently being given to (a) police officers already employed (b) new officers?

8. To what extent is such training known to the general public and how is the public involved?

9. Does the public understand to whom and how to present complaints of inadequate police protection, brutality, discrimination, etc?

10. What is the relationship between the Police Department and the Commission on Human Relations? Should tensions be reported directly to the Police Department or to the Commission on Human Relations?

11. In what ways can the practices of the Committee on Community Tensions be improved so as to better serve the police and the general community? How can the police make their grievances known to the public and how can the public be made to understand the limitations of what may be expected from police officers or the Police Department?

12. Is it possible to begin a long-range program of screening police (especially persons seeking to become police officers) as to their intergroup attitudes?

RE: Police-Community Relations Conference

If at all possible, I would appreciate some word from you in response to my note of 10/21/53 re a Police-Community Relations Conference. It is my hope that I will be able to get enough data and suggestions together to make possible the holding of a special meeting of the Committee on Interprofessional Relations either on Tuesday evening prior to the opening of the NAIRO Conference or perhaps a breakfast meeting during the Conference itself.

In order to make such a meeting fruitful, we need the benefit of any information and views you can submit before then. Thanks in advance for your cooperation.

Dear George:

I am writing to ask you whether you want to arrange for any special meetings during otherwise unscheduled periods at the Conference.

The program for 8:00 P. M. on Wednesday, November 11, has been cancelled. We are now planning to hold the reception for new members immediately after the close of the afternoon session of the Conference on Wednesday. This reception, then, would run from about 5:15 until about 6:45 P. M. The remainder of the time on Wednesday evening is unscheduled, as are the luncheon periods from 12:00 to 2:30 Thursday noon and from 1:00 to 2:00 on Friday. Likewise, the morning sessions of the Conference do not begin until ten o'clock on Wednesday or until nine o'clock on Thursday and Friday, so that breakfast meetings would be possible on those days.

The Minneapolis Fair Employment Practice Commission is inviting representatives of other FEP commissions to a luncheon on Thursday noon. The Resolutions Committee has a meeting scheduled early Wednesday evening. If you will let me know of any other plans you wish to make for special meetings, room facilities can be made available and appropriate announcements made.

Best personal regards and good wishes.

Sincerely yours,

Dear George,

I want to add a personal note to tell you how sorry I was not to have a real visit with you while we were in Minneapolis. I was especially sorry to have to miss the last day, and the purse which Will Leland brought me from the business session was just overwhelming. NAIRO is certainly a wonderful group!

About the enclosed invitation, I know this means another trip North quite soon, but I really do hope you can accept. A bachelor friend of mine who lives in the same building I do has offered the hospitality of his apartment if that would make it more feasible for you to attend--I live just a ten-minute walk from the campus.

Sincerely yours,

Helen

Dear George:

This year NAIRO has received a grant from the Field Foundation which will make possible the Second Conference on Research in Intergroup Relations on December 28-30. The Committee on Education, Training and Research in Race Relations of the University of Chicago are again serving as hosts.

The Conference is planned to help intergroup relations practitioners conceptualize their professional problems in the terms used by the social sciences and to provide them with the more important findings of social research as a criterion for evaluating their practice and, on the other hand, to give researchers closer acquaintance with the experience of intergroup relations agencies as a practical check on their concepts and theories. A copy of the program is enclosed.

On behalf of the Research Conference Planning Committee I am writing to invite you to be one of the two discussants for the analysis of the Minneapolis Conference by Isidor Chein and John Dean, December 28 at the 9 AM session. We are offering an honorarium of $25 to each discussant. We hope you can be present for all three days.

May I hear from you at your earliest convenience--by return mail if possible?

Sincerely yours,

Helen

Program

SECOND CONFERENCE ON RESEARCH IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS
UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO, DECEMBER 28-30, 1953

An ability to conceptualize the professional problems and activities in intergroup relations in the terms used by the social sciences gives the worker access to the findings of research as a criterion for evaluating practice. Conversely, familiarity with the experience of the intergroup relations agency may suggest to the researcher refinements of concepts and new variables to be taken into account in theory. The Research Conference Planning Committee believes that increased understanding and communication between the disciplines of research and practice in intergroup relations will ultimately result in more intelligent action and in more valid theory.

The first session of the Conference will be devoted to an analysis of the way in which intergroup relations workers define the situations in which they work and formulate their problems, as it was observed by a team of social scientists at the annual conference of the professional association in this field. It is hoped that this discussion will present the tasks and methods of the practitioner in a fresh perspective and suggest new problems for further research.

The next three meetings of this conference will set forth the pertinent theories and research findings of three broad areas of social science. They are intended to give a coherent statement of the most important sociological and psychological principles involved in intergroup relations.

The paper scheduled for the dinner meeting will provide a synthesis of the findings of intergroup relations research and indicate new problems for investigation.

The final papers, on techniques, will shift attention to professional practice and appraise six commonly-used types of program in the light of the social theory discussed previously and practitioner experience.

Dear George:

Thanks very much for the 60 copies of "Race and Law Enforcement." We will have a wonderful kit of materials for the participants in our conference. I do wish it were possible for you to work out some way of coming because you have a great deal that you could contribute to our deliberations.

We have not as yet heard from the police chief of Atlanta. We now have acceptances from about twenty cities. An invitation went out immediately to Chief Lindbergh in Birmingham and Art Levin telephoned me about him. We hope that both police chiefs will be able to participate.

We also appreciate the helpful comments in your letter of March 17.

As always, warm personal regards.

Mr. Maury Fagan

Dear Maury,

We are sending you 60 copies of Race and Law Enforcement.

The simple thing to say about policy matters in the South is that by and large, pervasively a few years ago and more than lingeringly now, polcie officers enforced two sets of law: what they understood of statutory law, and the law of white supremacy. The second set of rules were not usually openly enforced, but the man was there with the gun and the stick, and he was a white man, and his opinion mattered, and colored people "acted careful" when he was around. And of course, behind the scenes, much police brutality has been admixed with racial prejudice.

More pay, better education, more training, better methods in the courts, better police supervision, more influence on City Council by Negro voters, are all doing a lot to improve the old trouble. Negro policemen do a lot, where they are used, not only to enforce the law among their own people, but to bring the white members of the force around to appreciating the problems of the Negro group. The police have their side of it, too. Plenty of drunken rowdiness, low character, gambling, numbers, general meanness.

One needed push is toward getting from the courts equal penalties for like offences, from rape through murder, folonious assault, burglary and what have you. Stiffer penalties for crimes of Negroes against Negroes would slowly press toward fewer offenses.

O Negro police officers, the simple thing is that with only white officers every arrest is an interracial incident. To the crowd on the street, here' this poor colored man in custody, and a big white guy with a uniform on holding a club or a gun. That changes when the arresting officer is of the same color.

Birmingham would be a good place for some sociological inquiry. There was a police department in the grip of a mean man. His grip was broken, and new people are in charge. It would be of the greatest interest to study the old system, the point of change, and the actual changes being produced.

I hope our Chief in Atlanta does go, and I rather think he will. Art Levin is trying to get it worked out. And I am sure you do well to invite also Robert Landbergh, the new Police Commissioner in Birmingham. I wish I could be there, but I canna'.

Sincerely,

May 17, 1954

To: Members of the 1953 Nairo Commission on Other Civil Rights

From: Will Maslow

I hope you will forgive the use of the mimeograph machine in this memorandum; economy triumphed over formality.

I am inviting each person who served on the Commission on Other Civil Rights last year to serve again in 1954. The list appears on page 44 of last year's report. I hope that you will be able to accept.

On the assumption that you will serve, I am also asking you at this time to give consideration to the contents of the Commission's 1954 report. In accordance with a decision of the NAIRO Executive Board, the report will not describe developments since the last report but rather will focus attention on current, pressing problems. I wish to submit for your consideration the following list of topics as a basis for the report:

1. Getting out the Southern Negro Vote. - Better enforcement of Federal laws. Overcoming legal obstacles. Overcoming apathy.

2. Compulsory Segregation in Public Facilities. - The effect of the imminent Supreme Court decisions on parks, libraries, public auditoriums, etc. The effect of the decisions on Southern laws requiring segregation in privately owned facilities, such as railroads and theaters.

3. Increasing the Effectiveness of Equal Accommodations Laws. Encouraging resort to the laws by victims of discrimination. Broadening and strengthening existing laws. Improving the administration of existing laws.

4. Coping with Local Incidents of Violence. - Enactment of statutes, such as explosives control and anti-mask laws. Police training to deal with inter-racial tension. Obtaining more vigorous prosecution of offenders.

5. Race Tags in Newspapers. - The extent to which newspapers unnecessarily state the race, religion or national origin of persons charged with crime. The extent to which newspapers have abandoned this practice. Methods used to persuade them to do so.

6. The Impasse on Amending the Restrictive Aspects of the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952. - The suggestions that have been made for its amendment. The forces supporting its amendment. Availability of additional sources of support.

7. Current Problems of American Indians. - What steps do Indian and civil rights groups support in attaining the goal of full equality for American Indians? The effect of legislation enacted in 1953, expanding state jurisdiction over Indian affairs.

8. Interreligious Conflict in Adoption and Child Placement. - Analysis of existing laws and their constitutionality. The extent to which civil rights groups should concern themselves with this problem.

I would appreciate your suggestions for additions to and other changes in this list.

Will you also indicate which subject you would like to be assigned to you or on which you can help? If you cannot assist directly, do you have any suggestions of qualified persons not members of our Commission or even of NAIRO?

DATE: May 28, 1954

SUBJECT: June 16 Meeting, President's Committee on Government Contracts

On June 16 the President's Committee on Government Contracts is holding an all-day meeting in Washington for exchange of views, discussions as to its work and program, etc. The various departments of NAIRO will be represented. The Chairman of the Department of Local Private Services has been invited to attend, representing that particular Department of NAIRO. In preparation for the meeting it is important that I have your views, with particular relevance to the following matters:

1. What are the ways in which the President's Committee can be helpful in your local community through a program of education. Specifically, what kinds of educational programs could be devised to familiarize holders of government contracts with the purposes, aims and functions of the President's Committee in securing compliance with the non-discrimination clauses in government contracts.

2. In connection with compliance with the non-discrimination provisions of government contracts:

   a) Briefly, what is the employment pattern in your area followed by holders of government contracts?

   b) Have you handled such complaints of discrimination in your area?

   c) What has been your experience in handling these complaints?

   d) Have you used the machinery of the President's Committee and, if so, with what results?

   e) What suggestions do you have for improving the operation of the President's Committee in securing compliance with the non-discrimination provision in government contracts?

3. Any brief comments you care to make relating to the entire subject of the President's Committee on Government Contracts.

Thanks for giving this your immediate attention. Please send your response to:

Dear George:

The NAIRO Commission on Civil Rights, of which I am chairman, has the responsibility of arranging a session at the annual NAIRO Conference in November on "The Impact of the Supreme Court Decisions on Segregation in 17 States with Dual School Systems and on Advancement of Civil Rights, Generally." The conference will take place November 17 to November 19, in Boston. The session on the Supreme Court decisions will be on the evening of Wednesday, November 17. We expect that this will be the most important session of the annual conference. A great deal of attention will have been given to the decisions by that time and the exchange of ideas should be most fruitful.

It is our plan to have three speakers for the Wednesday evening meeting and we hope you will be one of them. Our plan is to have Bob Carter of the NAACP legal staff tell the story of the decisions generally. You would then be called on to discuss their impact in the South. We are asking Prof. Paul Freund of Harvard Law School then to go into detail on their legal implications. Your three talks would be followed by discussion from the floor. Among the items that you could cover would be: The reaction of different groups in the South, white and Negro, to the decisions, whether different reactions can be expected once the court issues its decree, the strength of the drive for integration in the Negro community, the likelihood and feasibility of continued segregation based on school district lines, and the effects of the decision on other forms of segregation such as railroads, libraries and public parks.

I do hope you will let me know promptly that you accept our invitation to participate in this meeting. I am sure you will understand that it is essential that we have someone who can present first-hand information of the picture in the South.

Yours sincerely,

Will

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS OFFICIALS is

Dear Mr. Evans:

If Random House would put out a $.25 edition of Brothers on the Color Front, the Southern Regional Council would buy twenty-five and would encourage its purchase by the twelve Southern state outfits affiliated with SRC by the time it might come out. Other organizations which might buy in decent quantities are the National Council of Christians and Jews, the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, and the American Jewish Committee.

I believe that if you dickered with the NAACP you might find some channels through which they could encourage their local branches to buy a hundred or two per branch.

You might deal, also, with Mr. H. Councill Trenholm at Alabama State College in Montgomery. He is president of the American Teachers Association. Its component state organizations of Negro teachers have money in their treasury and could buy the book in good quantity.

Here are two copies of Answers for Action. The map at the back is ill printed in this first run, but if we can sell the first edition of 20,000, we can get out the map in improved form.

Warm regards to you,

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Mitchell:

Your assistance is requested in connection with the letter from Mr. Maule of Random House, copy inclosed. While BREAKTHROUGH ON THE COLOR FRONT is an authentic,--almost a working manual,--on our development of integration in the armed services, it is not an official publication for numerous obvious reasons. Hence this inquiry through other channels.

We hope that through some of the numerous national organizations with which you serve, you can furnish suggestions leading to the assurance which the publishers understandably desire. BREAKTHROUGH is good reading, is highly rated in reviews but beyond this, it is an outstanding, timely work. It should prove useful, for example, in connection with integration in the field of education, in religion and in other phases of our national life.

Your advices would be appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

James C. Evans

Dear Mr. Evans:

Returning to the question of a possible 25¢ reprint edition of BREAKTHROUGH ON THE COLOR FRONT by Lee Nichols:

As I told you, we are continuing our efforts to place this, and one of the houses with which we have been working asks if you can give us the names of the organizations through which a paper-bound edition might be sold, with a conservative estimate of what quantity each organization might be expected to buy for distribution.

You understand, of course, that these reprint publishers ordinarily are not geared to do any special kind of selling and promotion. The vast majority of their books are simply distributed like magazines to newsstands, drug stores, and other such outlets where the public serve themselves. However, in the case of the house with which we are working now, if the potential market through organizations were large enough and would be easily enough reached, they might be able and willing to divert the time and efforts of some of their staff to this special sales effort. Therefore I sincerely hope that you'll be able to give me some really significant estimates along the lines suggested.

With all best wishes, I remain,

Yours very sincerely,

Harry E. Maule

COMPULSORY SEGREGATION IN PUBLIC FACILITIES

One week after outlawing segregation in the nation's public schools the U. S. Supreme Court refused to review three cases involving compulsory segregation in other public facilities. Among the lower court decisions left standing, one banned segregation in a low-income housing project in San Francisco. Another called for equalization of golf facilities for Negroes and whites in Houston, conceding that golf facilities could be equalized "while preserving segregation." The third decision, upholding segregation in a municipally-owned but privately leased ampitheater in Louisville, was remanded to the lower court for reconsideration "in light of" the school segregation decision and "conditions that now prevail."

Encouraged by the school segregation ruling and the high court's subsequent action in the housing and park cases, individuals and groups all over the country, but particularly in the Southern and border states, stepped up demands for desegregation in public facilities other than schools. Immediate pressures concentrated -- and were most successful -- in the area of municipal and state park facilities. Efforts to eliminate segregation in railway travel, theaters and other privately-owned public accommodations continued.

Municipal golf facilities. Following the Supreme Court's refusal to act on the Houston case, Houston's City Council adopted an emergency ordinance permitting Negroes unrestricted use of the city's three golf courses. The ordinance, which took effect immediately, passed at the recommendation of City Attorney Will Sears, who stated, "we cannot say that any segregation is lawful. Every attempt at segregation has been struck down by the Supreme Court's decision in recent years." Sears told the City Council that Houston would run "extreme risks" of having the action declared illegal if it attempted to meet the court's order to equalize facilities by providing separate courses for Negroes, or by reserving certain days for exclusive use by Negroes. Negroes began using Houston's courses the day after the Council's action. The Houston Chronicle commented, "By comparison with the matter of integration of pupils in the schools, it seems so unimportant that it will occasion little more than a ripple of interest." District Judge T. M. Kennerly, the lower court judge who ordered equalization, has since ruled that Negroes have the right to play on Houston's courses by virtue of the city ordinance abolishing segregation.

Dallas, Texas, also lowered the color bar in its municipal golf facilities soon after the Supreme Court's May action. Requests to use other park facilities revealed that Dallas had no municipal laws prohibiting Negro use of any of the city's recreation facilities. Taking the initiative, the Dallas park board informed the president of the Dallas Negro golfers' association that the department had no rules against Negro use of municipal courses and would allow all golfers to play. Before this action Dallas reserved one course for Negroes, three for whites.

Moves to de-segregate golf facilities in Atlanta, Birmingham, Columbus, Georgia, and St. Petersburg, Florida, met with less success.

In Atlanta a July District Court ruling ordered equalization of the city's white and Negro golfing facilities, but stipulated that equal facilities could be provided within the framework of segregation. The suit, filed in 1951, demanded entrance to one of Atlanta's seven golf courses for whites. The city provides no courses for Negroes, but has set aside funds for constructing a separate course for Negroes since the suit originated. No action to equalize facilities had been taken in August, when the ruling was appealed. Before the ruling came down Mayor Hartsfield announced that city officials might adopt a plan of opening municipal courses to Negroes on certain days each week.

Negroes seeking use of Birmingham's city golf links were told to apply to the city's park and recreation board, while requests of Negro golfers to use the city-owned golf course in Columbus, Georgia, were referred to the city commission. The St. Petersburg, Florida, City Council voted unanimously to give up the course it leased rather than permit Negroes to use it, even on a segregated basis.

Municipal swimming pools. No swimming facilities were involved in the two park cases before the Supreme Court in May, but earlier in the term the court refused to review a decision ordering Kansas City officials to admit Negroes to the city's Swope Park pool. The Swope Park pool and at least one other border-state municipal pool were integrated this summer without incident. In Clinton, Oklahoma, Negroes began using the city pool late in July. Prior to appearing at the pool, several Clinton Negroes questioned the park director, who told them he would have to let them use the pool if they insisted.

Negroes demanding use of municipal pools in Baltimore, San Antonio, Perry, Oklahoma, and Marion, Indiana, met with adverse court rulings or evasive tactics on the part of city officials. A Baltimore District Court judge, considering the implications of the school segregation decision on city pool facilities, ruled that the reasons for outlawing segregation in public schools "apply with diminished force, if at all, in the narrow field of public bath and swimming facilities." Judge Thomsen, who issued the ruling, called for further hearings to determine whether Baltimore's separate pool facilities were equal. In San Antonio, city officials closed all twelve of the city's municipal pools for "cleaning and repairs" the day after Negroes entered one of the "white" pools. One Marion, Indiana, city pool was also closed after Negroes filed suit to use the pool. The request of Perry, Oklahoma, Negroes to use municipal swimming facilities was turned over to the City Council.

Municipal beaches. Dr. Von Mizell, spokesman for a Broward County, Florida, legal redress committee, stated that Negroes would begin using established public beaches if a beach of their own was not provided by July 4. An Associated Press survey released at the time of Dr. Mizell's ultimatum indicated that segregation is practiced at public pools and beaches throughout the state of Florida, with few facilities for Negroes. Soon after Mizell's demand for a Negro beach a cross was burned in front of the funeral home operated by his cousin LeRoy Mizell. Police thought the cross was intended for Dr. Von Mizell.

Other municipal park facilities. The Supreme Court's action in remanding the Louisville park case to the lower court for reconsideration "in light of" the school segregation decision and "conditions that now prevail" has generally been interpreted as a ban on segregation in municipally-owned recreation facilities. Louisville's Mayor, however, told a delegation from NAACP shortly after the court's action that the city would not change its present segregated park system until the Supreme Court's decision on the case "becomes final and all its ramifications become known." Another suit involving segregation in Louisville Park facilities is before the Kentucky Court of Appeals.

Early in June the Dallas park board gave permission to a Negro sorority to use the Dreyfuss Club at the city's White Rock Lake Park. Only white groups had used the club previously. Permission to use the park's club facilities preceeded integration of Dallas' municipal golf courses.

In Houston, a move to extend integration to all municipal park facilities was defeated in the City Council.

State parks. Recent action to de-segregate state park facilities has been limited to several border states, including West Virginia, Oklahoma and Maryland.

This summer Negroes began using swimming facilities in Tomlinson Run and Hart's Run state parks in West Virginia. So many Negroes flocked to the pool at Hart's Run Park, White Sulphur Springs, West Virginia, that state officials put an out-of-state tariff of $2.50 on swimmers from neighboring states.

In Oklahoma D. J. Diggs filed a petition opposing the sale of bonds to finance a proposed Carver Memorial Area for Negroes in Sequoyah State Park. Diggs asked the Oklahoma Supreme Court not to approve the bond issue since the plan to establish a separate Negro park area is contrary to the constitution of the United States. The court approved the bond issue to finance Carver Memorial, but Diggs plans to continue legal action to stop construction of the segregated park.

District Judge Thomsen upheld segregation in Maryland's state parks at the same time he ruled on separation in Baltimore's municipal pools. Negroes filed suit to use Maryland's Sandy Point Park for whites several years ago on the grounds that facilities in Fort Smallwood Park were inferior. In August Judge Thomsen ruled that the two parks were substantially equal, and that segregation could continue since the decision banning segregation in the schools did not apply to segregation in park facilities.

No action designed to break down segregation in state parks in the South was reported, though Negroes in Texas and Virginia filed suits demanding entry to the "white" parks in both states several years ago. State park facilities are segregated throughout the South, with few or no parks for Negroes in most states. A recent Southern Regional Council survey of nine Southern states, for example, showed that only twelve parks for Negroes were in operation or under construction, while 180 parks for whites were available in the same states.

Municipal airport restaurants. At the end of May, 1954, the Nashville, Tennessee, City Council adopted a resolution objecting to "any form of discrimination or segregation" at the municipal airport. The resolution was passed to end segregation at the privately-leased restaurant at the Nashville airfield. Negroes in Charlotte, North Carolina, have since lodged a formal complaint against discrimination in Charlotte's airport eating facilities. Knoxville, Tennessee, dropped segregation in its municipal airport restaurant last January.

Other publicly-owned facilities. No intensified efforts to integrate public auditoriums or public libraries have yet followed the Supreme Court's May action. Cities in the South have recently shown more willingness to permit all-Negro groups to use their city auditoriums, but performances are generally segregated when both groups attend. At least 63 main public libraries in the South serve the whole community, while an additional 25 give limited service to Negroes. One or more branch libraries in eleven localities in the South serve both whites and Negroes.

Privately-owned public accommodations. Continuing attempts to desegregate railway travel, NAACP initiated action against eleven railroad lines for policies, rules and/or practices discriminating against Negro passengers. Seven of the eleven railroad lines agreed in hearings before the Interstate Commerce Commission in July that they segregated white and Negro passengers to some extent. Testimony came from Negroes who were segregated in north-south and east-west train travel and in waiting rooms in Richmond, Bowling Green and Raleigh. Parties involved in the suits have until October 18 to file briefs with the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Movie theaters. The Criterion theater and three other movie theaters in Oklahoma City began accepting Negro patronage on a non-segregated basis in August. Earlier in the year Washington, D. C., and Cairo, Illinois, successfully opened their motion picture houses to the entire community, Cairo through appeal to a state statute prohibiting racial discrimination in places of public accommodation.

Hotels. Little progress in the area of hotel restrictions based on race has been reported. The St. Louis, Missouri, Chase Hotel housed all the Brooklyn Dodger team for the first time this season. Negro players have formerly stayed in a separate hotel.

Virginia's General Assembly passed a law this spring making it illegal for hotels to advertise a ban against Jewish clientele in newspapers and magazines, and on radio, television and signboards.

Dear George:

We are trying to get the report of the Commission on Civil Rights in shape and I am calling on you for help. You will recall that it is our plan that the 1954 report will not attempt to describe developments generally since the last report but rather will focus attention on current, pressing problems. One of those listed in our original memorandum was as follows:

> Compulsory Segregation in Public Facilities. - The effect of the imminent Supreme Court decisions on parks, libraries, public auditoriums, etc. The effect of the decisions on Southern laws requiring segregation in privately owned facilities, such as railroads and theaters.

The logical place to get a treatment of ~~the~~ that subject is the Southern Regional Council. Consequently, you are it. Of course, this does not mean that it has to be you, personally. If Harold Fleming or someone else you select is in a better position to prepare a draft of this section, that will be quite all right.

As it looks now, each of the sections should run to six pages, double space. That means about 2,000 words.

I would like to have your draft soon enough to circulate it to other members of the Commission. In the unlikely event that you have to turn me down, please let me know promptly.

Yours sincerely,

Will

DEPARTMENT OF LOCAL PRIVATE SERVICES

MEMO TO: Members of Department of Local Private Services

FROM: Myron Schwartz, Chairman

DATE: October 13, 1954

By this time you have probably received a copy of the NAIRO program for the forthcoming Conference at the Sheraton-Plaza Hotel in Boston, November 17-19.

You will note from the program that the departmental meetings will be held Friday, November 19 from 1:00 to 3:30 P.M.

We are, of course, counting upon your participation in what promises to be a most fruitful Conference.

In considering suggestions for topics to be discussed at our departmental meeting, it seems to be the consensus that the following should receive major attention:

1) Relationships between the local private and the local public agency. We would anticipate that this would include discussion of structural, professional and operational relationships.

2) Applicability of the Commission reports to the operation of the local private agency. (You will note from the program that each of the five NAIRO Commission Reports will be the subject of a general session preceding the departmental meeting.)

We certainly hope that you are planning to attend the Conference. We will welcome any suggestions that you may care to make relating to our departmental meeting.

Best regards.

Dear Mrs. Amerman:

We don't do anything that I would call original research. The role we covet for ourselves is one of research interpretation -- down from the books to the folks and up from the folks to the book-doers.

We do, once a year in September, find out how many Southern cities have Negro police personnel. And, occasionally, we write out and get in special information on recreational facilities, or Negro firemen, or something like that. But to tell you the truth, our research is a hope.

We ought to have some people who could manage an up and down flow of info about research works and needs, but haven't got any such people and haven't got any money to hire them.

Sincerely,

George S. Mitchell

Dear George:

I have just been asked to prepare a 400- or 500-word article on trends and developments in research in 1954 for the NAIRO Reporter, with a deadline of October 21.

I would appreciate it greatly if you would furnish me with a very brief and immediate answer about the intergroup relations research which is being conducted under the auspices of your Council and any observations which might guide me in making my report.

I hope that you will be able to attend the NAIRO Conference in Boston.

Dear N.A.I.R.O. Member:

I assume you all read Charlie Livermore's breezy letter of August 23rd in which he advertised so very pleasantly the coming Conference in Boston on November 17, 18 and 19th. Tom Heffernan and I hope it will come up to his expectations. We're doing our best to make you comfortable and happy and have every confidence that such a group as ours is bound to get worthwhile things accomplished and have fun as well.

Enclosed you will find a reservation card for the Sheraton Plaza Hotel. The hotel states this card must be returned by the 9th. To help us in our Conference Planning please check off the list on the return card addressed to me.

You are all invited by the Mayor to the breakfast on November 17th and the bus trips. Please don't miss this opportunity to see historic Boston. The Governor's luncheon on the 19th must be limited to 50. Invitations for that will go out somewhat later. If you are a pillar of the Conference you may be confident you will be tagged for this luncheon.

We are making a package deal for Thursday's luncheon, dinner and Gridiron skit. All three for $10.00. You buy the unit.

So please, after reading this letter, return your hotel reservation to the Sheraton Plaza, the check list of activities to me and accept the program as a reminder of interesting things ahead.

We are looking forward to seeing you in Boston, November 17th, 18 and 19th.

Cordially,

Privately Owned Public Accommodations. The decisions apply only to segregation by state action. However, in two respects they do have an effect on the ordinary form of discrimination by such privately owned facilities as hotels, resorts and restaurants. First, when the decisions are extended to their logical conclusion, they will apply to state and local laws requiring segregation in private facilities. Thus they will invalidate the jimcrow laws of the South which require segregation in railroads and buses as well as in theatres, restaurants, sporting events, barber shops, and the like. Once the Supreme Court holds that the constitution prohibits all state action that requires segregation, these statutes will fall.

The decisions also affect the railroads in another way. It can be argued that the railroads are subject to the constitutional prohibition of discrimination by state action because they enjoy many forms of state assistance, not the least of which is their monopoly status. In addition, even if the constitution does not apply to them, they are subject to a provision in the Interstate Commerce Act which prohibits discrimination. A case is now pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission in which the NAACP is asking the Commission to rule broadly that the railroads are prohibited by this clause from maintaining segregation in interstate transportation. The Federal government has supported that argument fully in a brief filed with the Commission by Attorney General Brownell.

RE : Committee Meeting at NAIRO Conference - Wednesday, November 17, at 12:00 Noon

If you have no definite commitments on Wednesday, November 17, during the free lunch period of the first day's session of the NAIRO Conference, will you please hold that time open for a luncheon meeting of the Committee on Interprofessional Relations?

We need to discuss not only the broader work of our committee but also the pressing problem of whether we will hold a National Police-Community Relations Conference during 1955 and, if so, the general plans for such an undertaking.

I look forward to seeing you at the NAIRO Conference and hope that you will be able to attend the special meeting of our committee. Please let me know in advance if possible.

Mr. Will Maslow of the American Jewish Congress has suggested that those of us who are working on the Civil Rights Panel at the NAIRO Conference get together before the meeting and have dinner.

If it is convenient for you, we could meet at the Sheraton Plaza, Main Dining Room at six on November 17 and have a leisurely meal before the panel at eight. In the light of the condition of the NAIRO treasury, the dinner will have to be a "Dutch Treat". May we expect to see you at that time?

Dear George:

Miss Brantley has just sent me a copy of your letter of June 15 saying that you could accept our invitation to speak at the November 17 session of the NAIRO conference but that you were worried about spending SRC money. Your letter was sent to the NAIRO office in Toledo and never reached me here. That is why I did not answer earlier.

I don't have to tell you that NAIRO has no money. Neither do I know of any other place where your expenses might be found. I do hope you can figure a way of getting them out of the SRC budget. After carefully consulting my conscience, I am confident that I can sign any affidavit you may prepare certifying that your trip is necessary for the purpose of enabling you to fulfill the arduous obligation of spending the money you are getting from the Ford Foundation.

Let me hear from you soon, at this address.

Dear George:

The NAIRO Commission on Civil Rights, of which I am chairman, has the responsibility of arranging a session at the annual NAIRO Conference in November on "The Impact of the Supreme Court Decisions on Segregation in 17 States with Dual School Systems and on Advancement of Civil Rights, Generally." The conference will take place November 17 to November 19, in Boston. The session on the Supreme Court decisions will be on the evening of Wednesday, November 17. We expect that this will be the most important session of the annual conference. A great deal of attention will have been given to the decisions by that time and the exchange of ideas should be most fruitful.

It is our plan to have three speakers for the Wednesday evening meeting and we hope you will be one of them. Our plan is to have Bob Carter of the NAACP legal staff tell the story of the decisions generally. You would then be called on to discuss their impact in the South. We are asking Prof. Paul Freund of Harvard Law School then to go into detail on their legal implications. Your three talks would be followed by discussion from the floor. Among the items that you could cover would be: The reaction of different groups in the South, white and Negro, to the decisions, whether different reactions can be expected once the court issues its decree, the strength of the drive for integration in the Negro community, the likelihood and feasibility of continued segregation based on school district lines, and the effects of the decision on other forms of segregation such as railroads, libraries and public parks.

I do hope you will let me know promptly that you accept our invitation to participate in this meeting. I am sure you will understand that it is essential that we have someone who can present first-hand information of the picture in the South.

Klein -- Questioned what would be the effect of approving this report.

Chair -- Stated that this would be an organizational policy that must be implemented by the Board.

Coles -- Stated that he agreed with Muravchik that academic qualifications seem to have been given too much emphasis in the report.

Henderson -- Stated that there was great need for objective standards, but that academic qualifications can be offset by other abilities. Suggested possibility of inserting an "escape clause".

Allen -- Commented that the standards being recommended are minimum.

Robison -- Stated that the adoption of this report carried with it the assumption that these standards would be publicized and recommended to agencies as a guide. He questioned whether such a guide could be applied where non-professional criteria were being used by agencies or whether it would be used in private as well as public agencies.

Chair -- Commented that the question of private and public agency differences had been considered by the Committee.

Long -- Stated that the experience factor might be interpreted to include experience in a variety of organized group activities; that "personal characteristics" might be defined to include "commitment to the objectives of the field"; and he questioned why sex and race had not specifically been excluded.

Allen -- Called Mr. Long's attention to paragraph two.

Schermer -- Stated that there are basic differences between public and private agencies. Private agencies tend more toward professional background in selecting personnel. Public agencies need a reasonable set of minimum standards to serve as a guide. Would be supported by those eager to keep agencies non-political.

Schwartz -- Stated that in attempting to define personnel standards there was an implicit definition of the field itself. Stated that there was need to protect the professional worker and at the same time to raise standards of work in the field. Perhaps there is need for more definition of what constitutes good professional work. Stated that report was a good beginning but doubted that NAIRO was ready to adopt.

Motz -- Stated that there was obvious need to set standards that are an accurate measure of the professional abilities and skills that are needed. Agreed with Long that there was need to measure or include factor of commitment and outlook of worker.

Horne -- Stated that the limitations of the report were the limitations of the various agencies working in the field. There is not much clarity within the agencies, themselves, and there is need to analyze what skills, what backgrounds, what abilities have been effective. Also the need to bring apprentices into the field, perhaps from a variety of backgrounds.

A. Miller -- Stated that he agreed strongly with Frank Horne. Urged that NAIRO consider setting standards for membership as well as standards for agencies. Suggested further consideration. Also suggested the need to set standards for election of board members.

Allen -- Pointed out that there was nothing in the recommendation that would threaten anyone who had been working in the field for a couple of years. Stated that the Committee recognized the need for further consideration of the problem but had formulated recommendations as a basis for initial discussion by the membership.

Aronson -- Stated that he believed this report was the most significant topic presented to the Conference. Stated that the problem was complicated by the fact that there were different requirements for different jobs. Also that the profession itself needed better definition i.e. an objective body of knowledge that can be transmitted. Emphasized the need to take action in instances where workers are fired without cause. Urged further consideration of problem.

Livermore -- Pointed out that the Committee on Personnel Standards was one of NAIRO's oldest committees and was established before any particular incident had arisen.

Taylor -- Stated that he agreed with Arnie Aronson that this was one of the most important discussions at the Conference. Indicated that he believed the field had developed far enough to establish a few minimum standards that could serve as a guide for further development, especially in helping new agencies set standards.

Gremley -- Pointed out that the recommendations are not rigid but should be viewed as suggestions. Stated that he was opposed to the phrase, "elimination of right to substitute experience for training".

Allen -- Commented that that phrase referred to a future development.

Leland -- Stated that perhaps "training in related fields" could be added to qualifications definition.

Fineberg -- Stated that there was great need for a "floor" of minimum standards. Predicted that if this report was not adopted this year that it would not be adopted in another five years. NAIRO has to take action at some point on this problem.

Bragdon -- Urged that further discussion of this problem be undertaken at the Departmental meetings. Urged the setting of November 1955 as a goal for the adoption of some minimum standards.

Moss -- Stated that it was his view that this report was being submitted as a basis for initiating discussion. Urged further consideration during the year. Commented that perhaps the word "paid" could be eliminated in connection with experience.

Lett -- Pointed out that agencies are already exercising some kind of standards. Stated that there seemed to be some fear that these standards would threaten some of those now working in field. Pointed out that they would apply to those coming into field or to those seeking advancement. Commented that the idea of "commitment" referred to by several members would have to be spelled out more clearly, perhaps on basis of demonstrated action by worker.

Fagan -- Stated that this is the kind of problem which needs to be given regular consideration over a period of years. Expressed the belief that the field was not as vague as it has been described but that certainly the first statement of standards ought to be carefully considered. Need for widest possible agreement on statement before it is adopted.

Livermore — Pointed out that this Report was an attempt to start a full scale discussion, not to push adoption. Pointed out that any action on standards must be taken at a membership meeting and could not be adopted by the Board. Listed the following alternatives:

1. Adopt the Report
2. Amend the report and adopt.
3. Table the report until the second business session.
4. Refer the Report back to the Committee.

Herman Long MOVED, Alexander Allen seconded, that the report be accepted and that it and the comments and discussion be referred to the Board for appropriate action and that the subject be brought back to the membership for final action. ADOPTED UNANIMOUSLY.

Marshall Bragdon MOVED, Helen Amerman seconded, that this meeting request each of the Departments to bring this subject up for discussion during their meetings. ADOPTED.

IV. RECESS

Myron Schwartz MOVED, Joseph Coles seconded, that the meeting be recessed until Friday afternoon, November 19, 1954. ADOPTED.

(The Second Business Session was opened at 4:30 p.m., with the President, Mr. Charles Livermore, presiding. Thirty members present.)

V. REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON INTER-PROFESSIONAL RELATIONS

The Chair called upon Maurice Fagan, Chairman, Committee on Inter-Professional Relations, for a report from his Committee. Mr. Fagan reported that his committee had been giving emphasis to three fields: police, education, and recreation. He reported on the encouraging results of the first Police-Community Relations Conference sponsored by NAIRO in Philadelphia, April 8-9, 1954. He indicated that widespread interest had been developed among police officials throughout the country. He reported that police officials in Washington, D.C., had publicly acknowledged that they had altered their police training program as a result of the conference, even though they had not attended; had only read the conference reports. Mr. Fagan further reported that he had met with the new Executive Director of the International Association of Chiefs of Police and the latter had indicated his willingness to cooperate as soon as he gets himself oriented to his new job. George Mitchell MOVED, Margaret Garrity seconded, that the report be accepted with thanks and commendation to the Committee. ADOPTED.

Helen Amerman MOVED that the Committee be instructed to work closely with the Commission on Education in planning activities with educators. Although there was no second to this motion, Mr. Fagan indicated that he would make every effort to cooperate with the Commission on Education. Mr. Fagan indicated that his committee was now in the process of developing thinking as to ways and means of undertaking joint planning with other professional groups.

VI. REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLICATIONS

In view of the absence of Arnold Aronson, Chairman, Committee on Publications, the Chair commented that it might be well to have comments on the problem of the Reporter's content. The Chair indicated that everyone seemed to agree that an excellent, factual, objective job has been done on various issues of general significance. He stated, however, that the question of including internal association news in the Reporter had been raised. He also pointed out that the Departments and Commissions had submitted very little news concerning their activities for publication in the Reporter. George Mitchell MOVED, Maurice Fagan seconded, that the Publications Committee make every attempt to include occasional internal news concerning NAIRO affairs. ADOPTED.

VII. REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON NON-PROFESSIONAL LEADERSHIP.

The Chair asked Herman Long, acting Chairman of the Committee on Non-Professional Leadership, to report on the activities of this Committee. Mr. Long reported that the Committee had greatly extended its program this year in an effort to recruit additional agency board personnel into NAIRO membership. Nearly 1000 letters were directed to such persons through the assistance of the Secretary and Corneff Taylor, Chairman of the Membership Committee. Mr. Long commented that it was apparent from the response that professional workers could well afford to give their board members a little more information about NAIRO. Membership response was most encouraging, however, and additional effort along this line is planned for the coming year. George Mitchell MOVED, Margaret Garrity seconded, that the report be accepted. ADOPTED.

VIII. REPORT OF MEMBERSHIP COMMITTEE

The Chair called upon Corneff Taylor, Chairman of the Membership Committee, for a report on the activities of that Committee. In his absence, the Chair reported that NAIRO had grown from 187 members two years ago, to 290 at the present time. He indicated that the outlook for the present was good and that many members were actively helping out on this part of NAIRO's growth. George Mitchell inquired how many members had their dues paid by their agency. Over half of those present responded affirmatively. Mildred Mahoney MOVED, Herman Long seconded, that the report be accepted. ADOPTED.

IX. REPORT OF RESOLUTIONS COMMITTEE

In the absence of the Chairman of this Committee, Frank Baldau, the Chair called for resolutions from the floor. Mr. Maurice Fagan MOVED that NAIRO hails the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of the United States declaring segregated education in the U.S. to be unconstitutional and contrary to the best ideals and interests of the U.S. We note with deep gratitude that the overwhelming response of organizations and school systems all over the country has been positive and cooperative. We call upon educators, civic and religious groups, as well as intergroup organizations to combine their resources and skills to bring about the earlist possible integration of schools and the development of close and democratic relations among all pupils, teachers, school administrators, and between schools and the public. America once more has demonstrated to the world that the ills of democracy can be cured best by more democracy. NAIRO offers its full support and services in the effort to bring about integration in education and good human relations in and through the schools of our nation. Virginia Huebner seconded. ADOPTED UNANIMOUSLY.

X. TREASURER'S REPORT

The attached report was submitted by Harold Lett, Treasurer. The Chair commented that this past year the Association had lived within its approved budget for the first time. He stressed however, that the financial need was greater than ever before, in view of the fact that our surplus is at an all time low. George Mitchell MOVED approval of the report. Margaret Garrity seconded. ADOPTED.

XI. REPORT OF CONFERENCE COMMITTEE

Mildred Mahoney, Co-Chairman with Thomas Heffernan of the Conference Committee, stated that the Boston NAIRO people had enjoyed having the Conference and expressed the hope that it would serve to stimulate intergroup relations activity in the coming year. Margaret Garrity MOVED, Wilfred Leland seconded, that the Association express its deep gratitude to Mrs. Mahoney, Mr. Heffernan, and all the others that had contributed to the success of the conference. ADOPTED.

XII. DEPARTMENTAL REPORTS

Representatives of the various departments were asked to comment briefly on the activities of their Departments during the year. None of the departments submitted specific recommendations for action by the membership, but all reported better organization and increased activity during the year.

XIII. OTHER BUSINESS

Herman Long, NAIRO President for 1955, MOVED, seconded by Marshall Bragdon, that the Association extend its warmest thanks to the retiring President, Mr. Charles Livermore, for his leadership during the past two years, for his unselfish giving of himself, his stimulating ideas, creativeness, sincerity and dedication to the goals of NAIRO. UNANIMOUSLY ADOPTED. Mr. Livermore responded by expressing his appreciation to all those that had helped during the past two years. He pointed out that he had only been prevailed upon to accept re-election for a second term because his choice, and that of most NAIROANS, had been Herman Long, who had been unable to accept a year ago. He emphasized, in conclusion, that what had been accomplished thus far was only a beginning and that the steps yet to be taken would be the challenge that would enable NAIRO to realize its potential.

XIV. ADJOURNMENT

George Mitchell MOVED, Margaret Garrity seconded, that the meeting stand adjourned. ADOPTED.

Respectfully submitted,

John G. Feild

Eighth Annual Conference
National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials
Hotel Sheraton Plaza, Boston, Mass.
November 17, 18, 19, 1954

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON PERSONNEL STANDARDS

The assignment to this committee is to develop a statement or statements of training and experience qualifications which should be required of candidates for appointment to professional positions in the intergroup relations field. This assignment grew out of an increasing concern on the part of NAIRO members and board members about specific situations in which factors other than training and experience were the deciding factors in appointments to strategic positions.

These "factors other than training and experience" can be indicated by the assumptions that, in varying situations, the intergroup relations worker must be a Republican or a Democrat (and in some cases must be actively working at it); or must be a local resident, not an out-of-towner (or must be an out-of-towner); or must be white, gentile and a protestant, preferably of north European stock.

Our report is based upon the assumption that, except in unusual instances which we will indicate, these are all non-performance factors and that competent performance in the intergroup relations field is based upon professional training, experience and ability.

It is recognized that a yardstick of training and experience of the type we are attempting, if it is to serve a useful purpose, must be interpreted and sold to lay board members and appointing officers on the strength of its value in improving the calibre of personnel and service of the intergroup relations agency with which they are connected. This will necessarily be a long term process and will require some continuing NAIRO structure for this purpose.

Procedure

It was the thinking of Charles Livermore, NAIRO president, that a statement of training and experience could best be drawn up out of the collective thinking of the various departments. Accordingly, the chairman of each department was assigned to service on this committee and asked to submit his own views and gather and transmit the views of his department members on the subject. A memorandum and letter of explanation and transmittal went to each department head in April of this year with copies to the president and secretary. The questions posed were the following:

1. What training qualifications should be required for intergroup relations work generally? Undergraduate specialization? Graduate training?

2. What training qualifications should be required for intergroup relations work of the type covered by your own department? (For example, are there special training qualifications for work in the local public field as distinct from the general intergroup relations field?)

3. What experience qualifications should a person possess for professional work in the intergroup relations field? On the professional level but not in a supervisory or executive capacity? On the supervisory or executive level?

4. What experience qualifications should professional workers in your particular department possess?

5. What suggestions would you make as to the means by which NAIRO should seek to have these standards of training and experience adopted once they are arrived at?

   a. In private agencies; local, state and national?
   b. In public agencies; local, state and national?

6. Please add any other comments regarding this assignment which you feel will be helpful.

By July nine individuals had replied to this communication. By the first of November six more had commented, making a total of fifteen replies, all of them thoughtful and some of them in great detail.

Findings and Premises

Before attempting to synthesize this material into a useable statement, it might be well to point out the findings and premises upon which we have proceeded. These are:

1. that the development of professional standards in the intergroup relations field must be a long-term process and that much can be gained from the manner in which the allied fields of education and social work have spent many years in the progressive definition, refinement and improvement of standards in their respective areas.

2. that the present report of this committee therefore should be considered the first of a series of steps toward an ultimate goal; a first step however which seeks to be specific enough to be useable, high enough to serve as a challenge but low enough to be realistic.

3. that this committee would not attempt to inquire into membership standards for NAIRO. Its work has been upon the assumption that NAIRO membership would continue to include both lay and professional persons and those somewhere in between.

4. that most of the recent problems coming before NAIRO of the ignoring of training and experience qualifications have been in the area of local public agencies which suggests that much of the solution must be worked out in terms of the lay boards of local public commissions, municipal government, civil service, mayors and city councils.

5. that the already established qualifications of intergroup relations agencies which have them should be given careful study in determining the direction for further refinement of standards proposed herein.

6. that standard-setting in a field such as this, which includes successful practitioners from a wide variety of backgrounds, should begin in low, broad and flexible terms and move gradually over a period of some years to the high, narrow and rigid standards characteristic of the older professional groups.

7. that persons already in the field, lacking the particular academic suggested herein, but with years of successful professional experience to their credit, must be protected from handicap in promotions or new employment by providing for the acceptance of successful paid professional experience in lieu of specified academic preparation on a year for year basis.

8. that creed or national origin has no place in the selection of staff for intergroup relations work except in those instances in which a private agency may specify that part of the responsibility carried by the position is the transmission and interpretation of a particular creed or national culture pattern. In such instances it would be considered reasonable to specify that the worker be a member of that creed or nationality group.

9. that while generic statements of training and experience are needed, it woul not be wise at this point to attempt supplementary training and experience qualifications for departmental areas within the general field. In the words of Marshall Bragdon, chairman of the local public department, the wall between the specialties, at this stage, should be kept rather low. Of course this does not prevent individual agencies, especially those with larger staffs and many specializations, from setting such standards as they deem appropriate.

10. that in view of the importance of personal characteristics in this field, intergroup relations agencies and appointing officers might well consider the use of objective testing devices (social distance scale, ethnocentric measurement, projective tests, etc.) as one type of tool in evaluating candidates.

11. and finally, that NAIRO, in setting professional standards of the type proposed in Appendix A and Appendix B, must assume some responsibility in aiding agencies in understanding and meeting them. Thus NAIRO should continue to encourage the expansion of training facilities and opportunities it should continue and expand its role as a clearing house for competent professional personnel in the intergroup relations field; it should establish some machinery for presenting and interpreting NAIRO's position on personnel standards to intergroup relations agencies, City Councils, mayors and Conferences of mayors and governors.

NOTE: As indicated, both Appendix A and Appendix B, which follow, are minimum statements upon which individual agencies can and should build. Certain agencies already require much more. The point is that NAIRO, as the professional organization in the field, should be satisfied with nothing less.

As soon as is reasonable, NAIRO should begin to tighten and raise these beginning statements. Points at which this might be done and the sequence of such steps should be decided in the future. Among such steps however would probably be: the raising of graduate training from a "desired" to a "required" category; an increase in the amount of graduate training required; the elimination of the right to substitute experience for training; the elimination of the right to substitute training for experience; an increase in the number of years of experience required; progressive narrowing and making more specific the subject-matter content of the training required.

Mr. John Field
Toledo Board of Community Relations
565 North Erie Street
Toledo, Ohio

Dear John:

It was surely good to see you at the NAIRO Conference in Boston, and I believe I got a great deal out of the meeting. I think it is important that we who work in the South renew acquaintance with what is being done in Northern states so that we may seek to adapt it to our region and speed up the process of fuller democracy in this area.

I forgot to give you my dues when I was in Boston, and I am enclosing a check for $10.00 for same.

I was highly pleased and a little overwhelmed to be elected chairman of the Southern region of NAIRO, and shall certainly seek to build membership in this area among professional people in the field of intergroup relations. I am writing all our staff people urging them to join NAIRO, and I shall tell them to you for this purpose.

My best wishes for the continued success of the good work you are doing in the Toledo area.

Sincerely,

Fredrick B. Routh
Assistant Director

TO: Katherine Stoney

On this I have told Fred that he might plan on attending the annual membership meeting of NAIRO at Council expense, and on attending a single Board meeting of NAIRO at Council expense in any one year. But that otherwise for the Board meetings he should ask them to contrive ways to get his expenses paid, or to do without. And he agrees. So, let's just not pay but two NAIRO vouchers a year.

MEMORANDUM

FROM: George S. Mitchell

TO: Grace T. Hamilton
Frederick B. Routh
Katherine Stoney

I am considering writing a letter to each field employed person, professional in level, including Dagen in Kentucky, and suggesting that they join NAIRO.

I have learned from NAIRO officials that it is frequent for agency staffs to join NAIRO out of agency funds. It costs $10.00 a year.

My letter, unless I am advised to the contrary, would say that we see nothing wrong with their joining NAIRO out of their agency budget.

In my view it is desirable for Southern staff in this field to be linked to the national professional show.

What do people say?

GEORGE S. MITCHELL,
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

February 22, 1955

A Council to attain, through research and action, the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South.

Years ago, in the period of World War II, an outfit called the American Council on Race Relations helped bring into being in Northern and Western states and cities, private or public bodies to deal with problems of race relations. In the course of time, the ACRR went down the drain. But before it died, it called into being the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials. NAIRO is now eight or nine years old. It started with a handful of members and now goes nearly up to 400. Annual convention. Board of Directors, on which I have served and on which Fred Routh is now Southern Representative. Herman Long at Fisk is the President of NAIRO. It puts out a monthly bulletin called the NAIRO Reporter. A good many of the people in it struggle toward making it an honest-to-goodness professional body, setting standards of who can be an intergrouper and who may not. My ambitions for it are less high; I think it does a useful job of hooking us all together and letting us know what others are doing.

It costs $10.00 a year to belong to it. It has almost no other source of income, so it has to charge $10.00. Membership covers receiving the NAIRO Reporter, and various other items.

Upon inquiry at the last annual meeting, I found that in quite a large number of instances persons professionally employed by intergroup agencies joined and continued their annual dues payments in NAIRO at the expense of their agency.

We see nothing wrong with this course for your group.

I do urge you to join NAIRO. You are now in this new field; it is the recognized Association of people who try to learn how to do this new thing; and we ought to be in it.

You join it by sending $10.00 and your name and address and the name of your agency to John G. Feild, NAIRO Secretary-Treasurer, Board of Community Relations, 565 North Erie Street, Toledo, Ohio.

Sincerely,

George S. Mitchell

NAIRO BOARD MEETING
April 22-23, 1955

NAIRO Board Meeting in Washington took place on April 22-23 and FBR, as chairman of the Southern Division, attended. The plans for the annual meeting to be held in Milwaukee, November 30-December 1 and 2, were firmed up.

Considerable interest was expressed in that fact that our state directors were joining and that this gave more widespread representation from the South than NAIRO has had prior to this time.

I reported on the work of our state organizations and of the central office to the group and out of this came a request for an article on the changing South for the NAIRO REPORTER. This I shall proceed to do.

The overall effect of the meeting was good. There was a harmonious and democratic relationship among the members present and it is to the advantage of SRC to have representation on the Board and to have our state people as members.

ORGANIZATIONAL BUSINESS

All of us are aware that the scope of NAIRO's activities has been enlarged beyond the capacity of our unpaid staff. Fortunately, the willingness of our membership to undertake volunteer assignments is enabling us to do things that would just not otherwise be possible. And yet we continue to grow. During 1954 we added 103 new members--an increase of about 40%. So far this year we have gained another 25 members and the trend continues. The number of new agencies being created, both in the South and in smaller communities throughout the country, gives even greater emphasis to the need for strengthening professional standards and concepts of work in the field. With this in mind, and within the limits of our resources, an effort will be made during the coming year to provide all of you with as complete a picture of NAIRO's activities as possible. We sincerely hope you will read these materials carefully and give us your comments and suggestions. Don't hesitate to offer ideas that you feel might be useful to your colleagues.

Enclosed in this mailing you will find the following:

1. The minutes of the business meeting held at the Eighth Annual Conference in Boston, including a copy of the financial report submitted at that time and the very important report of the Committee on Professional Standards.

2. A Directory of Leadership Personnel, along with a statement describing our organizational structure and a chart outlining this structure.

3. A copy of our audited 1954 financial statement.

4. A copy of the proposed program for our Ninth Annual Conference to be held in Milwaukee November 30th, December 1st and 2nd.

PROFESSIONAL STANDARDS

Following the very fine and important discussion held at the Boston Conference on the report submitted by our Committee on Professional Standards, the Board, at its January meeting in Chicago, considered ways and means of making a further advance with this problem. The Committee has been enlarged and it is hoped that a conscientious effort to solicit the thinking of our membership will result in bringing before our business meeting in Milwaukee the kind of report on which some definitive action can be taken. Each Department Chairman has been requested to solicit the views of NAIRO members within his area. In the months ahead we are sure you will be receiving communications from them and we sincerely hope you will take the time to give them your views.

LEADERSHIP PERSONNEL

Recognizing that there still may be some lack of clarity regarding the functions assigned to the Departments and to the Commissions, we hope you will carefully review the enclosed materials. We call your attention especially to the enclosed "Members Registration Form", which we hope you will return to our headquarters, signifying your interest in the activities of one of the Commissions. The reports issued by these Commissions are an effort on the Association's part to draw together the knowledge and information upon which we base our efforts as professional workers in the field. Their value is no better than the contributions that all of us make to them. In a like manner, the value of the Departments in providing an opportunity for exchange of experience among professional workers associated with similar types of agencies will be strengthened and made more effective only to the degree that we can jointly develop closer working relationships. Finally, the scope of the activities being carried on by our committees in many vital areas of professional concern is increasingly producing results. This year, we hope to have these committees meet a day in advance of the Conference opening. At the January Board meeting, a new Committee was established on Resources and Planning. It has been given the specific assignment of reviewing both our present resources and of developing projects related to concrete needs in the hope that we may be able to enlarge both our membership services and our contribution to the total field. Several new projects are being drafted for which we plan to solicit funds, including a Training Institute for new workers in the field.

NAIRO REPORTER

Both at the Boston business meeting and at the last two Board meetings, there has been continuing discussion of enlarging the scope of our regular monthly publication. The objective and factual material now being reported needs to be augmented with information relating to both our internal affairs and to other activities in the field not now being reported. How we can find the resources to do this is being given top priority. One of the valuable and significant ways that our own membership may be able to give assistance is to arrange to have their agencies subscribe to 15, 25, 50, or 100 copies for distribution to their Board members and in their local communities. These subscriptions are available at the reduced rate of $2.00 per year. While the number of agency subscriptions has greatly increased, it still does not begin to reflect the potential available to us. Please give this serious consideration.

OTHER PUBLICATIONS

Unfortunately, due to a mix-up in Boston, all of you did not receive copies of the five Commission Reports. Lacking the funds to publish these ourselves, we were able to obtain mimeographed copies through the courtesy of a number of agencies, but our supply is now completely exhausted. Copies of the 1953 reports are still available, however, from our headquarters, at a cost of $3.00 for the two volumes.

1953 Research Conference Proceedings. Through the cooperative, volunteer efforts of about a dozen NAIROans, the Proceedings of the 1953 Research Conference will be mailed to you within the next week or so. These Proceedings are being made available to NAIRO members without charge, and will be sold to non-members for $2.00. Those who have reviewed them are agreed that the material contained in this 85-page publication is among the most valuable developed in recent years.

The effort involved in publishing them has been tremendous and the cost involved to NAIRO in issuing and distributing them has prompted the Board to suggest that NAIRO members receiving them might wish to contribute $1.00 toward this project. We will be happy to send you a bill if you are able to charge this to your agency.

PERSONNEL EMPLOYMENT REGISTRY

The services being extended to NAIRO members, and others who are interested in seeking employment in the field, while not as effective as we might wish it to be, has been steadily improving. We have been receiving many requests from both existing and new agencies for personnel referrals. Recently, through our Personnel Registry, NAIRO member Robert Sweet was named Executive Director of the Des Moines Commission on Human Relations, growing out of a referral from our Registry. Several openings are now pending and we suggest that you pass along the word that agencies interested in personnel may wish to contact us. Also, we are happy to list those interested in seeking positions. As you know, the Association makes no attempt to evaluate personnel records, but simply acts as a clearing house.

MILWAUKEE CONFERENCE

The task of organizing the Milwaukee Conference is now going forward, full steam. Virginia Huebner, the Conference Chairman, reported at our recent Washington Board meeting that the local Committee is well organized and is now getting down to specifics. We think you will see from the enclosed proposed program that the arrangements thus far are both extensive and enticing (that is if you like Milwaukee beer). We hope you will not hesitate to send your suggestions to your Department Chairman, and we hope you will find it possible to work with one of the Commissions in making this Conference as fruitful as it should be.

FINANCIAL NOTE

It should be quite plain from the enclosed 1954 financial statement, that the need for funds continues to plague us. All bills for 1955 membership dues have recently been mailed. If you have received yours, please act upon it as soon as possible. The Board continues to give its best thinking to the augmentation of our resources. Enclosed you will find a few membership applications. How about signing up a colleague or two to be in NAIRO?

Dear John:

Received your memo of August 5 regarding a letter to Albert Cole, the Housing and Home Finance Director and think it is imperative that a letter be sent. Whenever political considerations are placed above professional competence, it is time for professional associations such as N.A.I.R.O. to take direct action in the form of recommendations to the proper authority.

I wholeheartedly endorse our taking action in this case.

MEMORANDUM August 5, 1955

TO: NAIRO Executive Board

FROM: John G. Feild, Secretary

SUBJECT: Professional Standards and the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

In view of the fact that President Herman Long and President-elect Marshall Bragdon are both on vacation, I have decided to bring before the NAIRO Board a vital matter that, in my judgment, requires immediate action. It has come to my attention today that two members of this Association, Dr. Frank S. Horne and Mrs. Corienne Morrow, have been discharged from their positions by Housing Administrator Albert Cole because of "budgetary considerations". I have also been informed that Mr. Cole's press officer has stated that it has been determined that there is no longer a need for the special positions occupied by Dr. Horne and Mrs. Morrow. Both Dr. Horne and Mrs. Morrow are appealing this decision under the rules of the Civil Service Commission on the basis that they have 19 and 20 years tenure, respectively. In view of the fact that these two individuals appear to have been the only two persons affected by "budgetary considerations", and in view of the fact that political considerations were undeniably involved in Dr. Horne's earlier displacement by Mr. Joseph Ray, it would appear that professional standards associated with racial policy in the Housing and Home Finance Agency have been abandoned in favor of political pressure.

Having been a participant in NAIRO discussions on matters of this kind from the date of the Association's first meeting, I have personally concluded that the Association has a clear obligation to protest this action and to express its disapproval. I repeat, this is a personal conclusion. As Secretary of NAIRO, I am proposing, therefore, that the members of the Board be polled as to their views in this matter. There are obviously many methods of approach that could be taken, and I am hopeful that each member of the Board will make clear his position. I would propose that we send the attached communication to Mr. Cole and President Eisenhower. If you disapprove it, or if you feel it should be amended or a substitute drafted, please indicate this. If you approve it, I would hope that you would also state that. No action will be taken in the name of the Association unless there is a clear and preponderant agreement among the members of the Board. I urge you to write me at once.

PROPOSED DRAFT

Mr. Albert Cole, Administrator
Housing and Home Finance Agency
Washington 25, D.C.

Dear Mr. Cole:

It has come to our attention that you have recently discharged Dr. Frank S. Horne and Mrs. Corienne Morrow as Race Relations Specialists from your staff because of "budgetary considerations."

Both Dr. Horne and Mrs. Morrow have been members of good standing in this Association for many years and are both recognized authorities in the intergroup relations field. In reviewing this situation, we find that contradictory and confusing practices concerning racial policy and the utilization of competent professional intergroup relations advisors within your agency have raised a serious question in our minds concerning the motivation for this action. In view of the extensive staff of racial advisors maintained by the HHFA and its affiliated agencies, we have no hesitation in questioning the wisdom of invoking "budgetary considerations" as a basis for discharging these two individuals. Nor can we understand how these vital positions could be abolished in the face of present realities. We feel impelled, because of the demonstrated ability of the two individuals involved, to urge your immediate reconsideration of this action.

It is our firm conviction that continued confidence in the administration of programs in the public interest can be justified only insofar as those responsible for such programs demonstrate their willingness to place the public interest above partisan and personal considerations. The encroachment of partisan and personal considerations into the civil rights field has done as much to undermine public confidence as outright bigotry and discrimination. It is our observation that the discharge of Dr. Horne and Mrs. Morrow will be so interpreted. As such it will reflect harmfully upon the dedicated efforts of every public and private agency throughout the country that has sought to maintain an objective, professional approach toward racial policy.

We sincerely trust, therefore, that you will undertake an immediate review of this problem with such subordinates as may have given you advice in this matter, in the hope that an immediate, satisfactory adjustment in this action may be worked out.

Very truly yours,

Many thanks for your piece about the Southern Regional Council. This seems to me ideal for the Reporter. I shall submit it to our Editorial Committee, of which, as you probably know, Arnie Aronson is Chairman.

Since we publish monthly October through July, and since the July issue has already gone to the printer, there is no prospect of our being able to use your piece until the Fall. If anything happens to make you want to revise the article in any way, I hope you will communicate with me before Labor Day, so that we may have your final copy in hand when we begin to prepare the October issue.

Dear George,

Have run into some odds and ends of info in which I thought you would be interested; some of which you doubtlessly know.

The CIO has given the NAACP $75,000; I think we should ask the new AFL-CIO for at least $25,000. Jim Hoffa, V.Pres of the Teamsters is interested in this field; contact through Joe Coles of Detroit (he knows and likes you).

There's a new foundation coming on the scene: headquarters to be Chicago, fund of $50 million ! Money from Anna McCormick Blaine; to be called the American Foundation or the New World Foundation. Director: Fred Hoehler.

The gang at NAIRO sends their best regards to you and Helen Ammerman has a new job with this group studying race in housing. It's for a year. She says your letters helped her through the rough period.

Off to Canada tomorrow; all well here. Got a new Mercury.

As ever,

Fred

P.S. Best regards to all at SRC.

I am looking forward to seeing you in Milwaukee.

Give my best regards to Marsh.

Would you please think up a title for your talk, and let me have it right away.

"Soundings from the South"
"The Southern View"

Choose one of these or give me something different (I hope).

By the way, since we will not have anyone officially from NAACP, Roy Wilkins has agreed to provide us with a written resume of their efforts, to date. These we hope to distribute at the meeting.

Dear Fred:

I hope that you have had a very enjoyable vacation and are liking your new car.

As I indicated at Toledo, our Departmental luncheon on November 30 in Milwaukee is to feature the university human relations centers. Rather than have a few discussants following the presentation of Dean Epley's findings, we are having a longer general discussion period and ensuring a high level of participation by making a special effort to have in the audience (1) faculty from each of the centers, (2) invited practitioners with extensive experience in hiring intergroup relations workers and/or service on workshop faculties, and (3) graduates of these centers who are now employed in intergroup relations agencies.

This is a special request that you attend that luncheon to give us the benefit of your remarkably rounded experience as a student and later faculty member as well as a practitioner.

May we count on you?

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Fred Routh,
Southern Regional Council,
63 Auburn Avenue, N.E.,
Atlanta 3, Georgia.

Dear Fred:

I wanted to let you know that the Education Commission session at NAIRO has been moved up a day. In other words, our part of the program will come on Thursday, December 1, instead of Wednesday, November 30.

This change became necessary when Dan Dodson found that he could not be with us on the 30th. He offered to prepare a paper, to be used as a substitute, but we thought such a thing would fall flat. Besides, we wanted him and his personality.

We hastily made long distance calls to Virginia Heubner, George Shermer, and John Feild, and thus switched sessions.

I didn't contact you about this because I assumed you would be attending the conference the entire time, and one day would suit you as well as another.

Other than this, plans are all going along well. You and Dan Dodson are the speakers; Dr. Martin Klotsche, president of Wisconsin State College in Milwaukee is moderator of later discussion.

By this time, you have the Education Commission Report, from which Dodson will speak. I'd be interested in your reaction, after you read it.

That's all, at this time. If I don't hear from you, I'll at least be seeing you soon, in Milwaukee.

Sincerely yours,

Virginia

CONFERENCE BULLETIN

From present indications our NINTH ANNUAL CONFERENCE will be the largest in NAIRO's history. The program is heavy and reflects a great deal of planning and effort by our Conference Chairman, Virginia Huebner, her local Committee and each of our Departmental and Commission Chairmen. Please note:

A REAL BARGAIN: For $13.00 you will receive three luncheons, two dinners, a Gridiron Show and Cocktail Party. Transportation to Marquette University and Miller's brewery is also included. This is a package plan designed to save you money.

DUES: Conference time is a good time to pay your dues. Our membership is at an all-time high, incidentally.

BY-LAWS: Enclosed you will find a recommended revision of our By-Laws (Blue Cover) along with the present By-laws. Please give them some study as they will be acted upon at the Conference.

PROFESSIONAL STANDARDS: Alexander Allen, Chairman of our Committee on Professional Standards and Ethics urges all members to review the 1954 Report and Business Meeting discussion which was mailed to all members with our May 2nd Newsletter. Proposals for specific action will be submitted to the Business Meeting.

NEXT YEAR: Our Tenth Anniversary Conference will be held in Philadelphia.

NOT ALL WORK: A press clipping from the Shaker Heights Gazette reports on the sneak preview of the 1955 NAIRO GRIDIRON, produced again this year by Baldau-Klein, Ink., They called the show, "racy."

REPORTER: Agency subscriptions at the reduced rate of $2.00 per year on orders over 15 for the Reporter have increased. Check yours.

NEW PROJECTS: An "intern" program for professional training, improved employment referral service, a NAIRO sponsored "In-Service Intergroup Training Seminar", a Personnel Directory, and several special publications are under consideration by our Committee on Resources and Planning. Reports at the Conference.

See you in Milwaukee!

Herman Long, Pres.
John Feild, Secy.

The National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials

DEPARTMENT OF LOCAL PUBLIC SERVICES
Marshall Bragdon, Chairman
105 City Hall, Cincinnati 2, Ohio

ADMITTED: WE VISIONED MORE THAN WE'VE DONE In January, LPS Co-chairman Bill Gremley and I gave the NAIRO Board an ambitious tentative program of things we hoped LPS could do in 1955. (See list in LPS March Newsletter.) Many of these are yet unachieved. BUT we still believe in thinking big. We asked agency executives to react to the list, rating the items' importance. At least a dozen sent thoughtful comments which in sum added up to reflect a lot of wisdom and hard sense, to which we have referred again and again.

The March and July Newsletters were generally commended as valuable communication aids. (They went also to many other NAIRO members; several national agencies requested quantities for home and field staff members; thus widening the awareness of LPS activity and progress.) The July Newsletter item, predicting an impending shortage of qualified LPS workers, touched off varied correspondence, followed by conferences and Board discussion, and plans to further analyze the training problem.

Your chairman did not get out a September issue as planned, due chiefly to his inability to handle too many jobs, partly due to writer's cramp among our members... Though this issue is pointed toward the Milwaukee conference, for those who will attend it, we remind ourselves and all colleagues that the majority of LPS people in NAIRO do not get to the annual gathering. For maximum service to our entire membership, all of us should help to devise, demand and support more means of exchanging experience, information and professional stimulation. And that should challenge every one of us. As a group, more problems faced LPS agencies near 1955's end than a year before; not just tensions to handle in our communities--but problems inside our agencies: personnel, relations to government, our role and status, etc. We need to face these with full access to one another's applicable wisdom. Three days in Milwaukee is just a beginning. Year-'round communication must somehow be bettered. Let's think on that, then work at it. --M.B.

WHAT'S BREWING IN MILWAUKEE? At the 9th NAIRO conference, at Milwaukee Nov. 30 to Dec. 2, two meetings involve us especially. On Wednesday night the joint meeting of Local Public and Local Private agencies will explore the vital question of their interrelations. The speakers will be Fritz Pollard of the Chicago CHR and Robert Segal of Boston's Jewish Community Council. But everybody's contributions in discussion will make or break this effort to understand the other fellow's role, and thus build sounder cooperation.

The regular department meeting Thursday morning has scheduled these items: (1) Chairman's 1955 report; (2) review of "Interrelations" meeting; (3) discussion of problems of personnel--training needs, professional standards, etc.; (4) news of younger agencies; (5) comments on Education Commission Report; (6) choosing 1956 Chairman, planning program. But the agenda is flexible; items of felt interest can be added. The big aim is to give members what they consider of practical value.... Other conference meetings are of obvious interest to us; such as "The Role of the Practitioner in Times of Transition", the Housing, Education, Civil Rights and Manpower meetings. Also, the Research Department's survey of Human Relations Centers' training and other services. And the second report of the Professional Standards committee will be keenly awaited by LPS people.

MANY HANDS COMPLETE DENVER HR INVENTORY The Denver Inventory of Human Relations was completed on June 6, when a workshop was held to suggest methods of carrying out the recommendations. At the invitation of the Mayor, about 60 organizations sent representatives. On May 10, 276 persons had responded to an invitation from the Mayor, the City Council and the Commission on Human Relations to attend a dinner meeting to receive the report of the Inventory, and to hear Dr. Frank Graham, UN representative for India and Pakistan, speak on "Human Relations in the World and in the Community."

The self-inventory required a year's work by the Denver Commission on Human Relations, State Anti-Discrimination Division, Urban League, ADL, NCCJ, Adult Education Council, State Employment Service, Packing House Workers, Japanese-American Citizens League, and League of United Latin American Citizens. Dr. Warren Banner, National Urban League, served as consultant. The areas studied were education, employment, housing, public accommodations and social factors affecting democracy; with regard to Negroes, the Spanish-speaking, Japanese and Jews.

The 300-page report is available for $4. A brochure and Recommendations of the Workshop are free, on request to the CHR (Helen Burke, director), City-County Building, Denver, Col.

RADIO AND TV CODE SET IN CHICAGO The Chicago Commission on Human Relations added another feather to its cap this summer when the news directors of nine major radio and television stations agreed upon a common program to eliminate inflammatory statements in reporting racial or ethnic tensions and juvenile gang fights.

The purpose is to minimize the danger of attracting additional participants to the scene of outbreaks, while assuring that the basic news is reported. In brief, the points for guidance in handling such stories are: (1) Keep it brief. (2) Avoid superlatives or adjectives that might incite or enlarge conflict, or renew one which has been quelled. (3) Verify reports before filing advisory data with stations. (4) Write advisory data in calm, matter-of-fact form. (5) Judge minor stories as to news value the same way as any other routine stories.

A basic form was devised for early reports when there is a violence potential, which includes caution to editors and stations managers. Originated by Isaac Gershman, managing editor of the City News Bureau of Chicago, a press service owned by the city's major newspapers and serving the major stations, the project was turned over to CHR director Francis McPeek to secure further support from other stations in Chicago and the suburbs.

Interested agencies may write the Chicago CHR (54 West Hubbard St.), for fuller details.

EXECUTIVE LEAVES ST. LOUIS CHR JOB Donald Lowe, who for about a year had been executive secretary of the St. Louis Council on Human Relations, wrote in mid-September that he was resigning to become director of management and relocation for the St. Louis Housing and Land Clearance Authorities. He adds, "I expect to consider myself still as an intergroup worker, to keep in the middle of civil rights activities, to retain my NAIRO connections and, if possible, attend the Milwaukee convention."

He attributes the increased activity during his tenure to "many factors: One of the most vigorous city administrations we have had for many years; a most energetic Council; the five-year existence of the agency, during which time many of the troubles and resistant elements were overcome by the often maligned people who had the courage to go ahead; and certainly the steadily improving civil rights atmosphere has helped every agency in the country." He notes several current achievements and efforts: the "highly uneventful" integration of schools (CHR's Institute late in 1954 focussed on integration, involved 600 teachers); being "community coordinator" of the first integrated public housing project in Missouri; enlisting support for a public accommodations ordinance; seeking a non-discrimination clause in city contracts... May the momentum continue.

JOB OPENINGS Barring late developments, this is the picture: (1) In September, Roosevelt Dickey resigned as Frank Baldau's assistant at the Cleveland Community Relations Board, to enter business. There has been some delay in filling the job. (2) At last report Grand Rapids was still seeking a director of its new LP created in July. (3) We haven't heard that a successor to Donald Lowe has been found, in St. Louis. (4) No word comes that Dan Anthony of Newark has found an assistant (Ira Gissen went to the American Jewish Committee office in Chicago, early in 1955). (5) Nor any word that the St. Paul Council of Human Relations has filled Russ Myers' shoes. (6) New York is taking its time in setting up and manning the new Commission. (7) Joe Coles got a new field partner on the Detroit CRC last summer--but his name has plumb slipped our memory. That's all we have.

CALLING ALL COPS IN CINCINNATI For 10 years the Mayor's Friendly Relations Committee has variously worked with police. Since 1950 when Stanley Schrotel was made chief, top leadership has been represented at every workshop and institute available--Joe Lohmann's course in Chicago, the Southern Police Institute, NAIRO's Philadelphia conference in 1954, and the Michigan State-NCCJ sessions last May. During that time, MFRC's executive was invited to speak to every recruit class. But the big and exciting chance came last September, when he was offered a two-hour weekly spot in the in-service training. Each week, 15 to 25 men from every district get his uncensored ideas and observations on local intergroup relations. Because he starts by noting that "Police are a minority, too," their guard drops, they listen, think aloud, get out their beefs, listen some more, and see where Cincinnati's LPS fits and aids them. All this is attested by the unsigned critiques they write at the week's end, and other comments to the training chief. The proportion that join in discussion is another evidence. By springtime, every patrolman will have had this experience. The speaker is trying to keep weekly notes on this rare, if not unique, practitioner's opportunity.

Dear C. H.,

Thanks for good news of NAIRO.

I meant not to be as positive as I was in the judgment on the matter of the expense account. It was a hard decision, and hard cases make bad rules! Do what is wise, but that one I thought ought on balance to fall the other way. We all know that you spend all sorts of time and effort on our behalf, and are grateful for it.

Dear George,

NAIRO is becoming a full-fledged professional organization. I was impressed by the change in attitude which had occurred since my last contact in 1951. There seemed to be less dogmatism and more understanding. Here were people who had learned from their experiences to develop techniques appropriate to the wide variety of situations encountered.

Fred added greatly to the stature of SRC; the standing ovation he received at the end of his talk was well deserved. More than ever I am convinced that a close relationship between SRC and the other organizations that comprise NAIRO is highly desirable.

In keeping with your pointed suggestion, Fred, John and I "spent hours not minutes" in planning the training program. Bob Johnson joined us on one occasion and agreed to prepare a memo to be circularized among the consultants prior to an early January meeting. Fred is to prepare a letter to state groups on the board institutes. My immediate job is a rough draft of a letter to go out, over your signature, asking certain designated persons to become consultants. Later, I will attempt an analysis of the materials we collected last summer on board composition and program evaluation.

No doubt you are right in your judgment that added expense entailed at home because of my absence on SRC business should not be included in my expense account. I can see some difficulty in justifying such an item. In extenuation of this seeming irregularity I should like to point out that I have not been able to limit my work with SRC to the periods that I am out of the state on official missions. Scarcely a day passes that I do not devote an hour or two of work on our program.

I would hope to spend a day in the Atlanta office before the holidays, possibly December 16-17.

NAIRO RESOLUTION

"The National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials at its 9th Annual Conference in Milwaukee on December 2, 1955, hails the progress which has been made in a significant number of states and communities in implementing the decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court declaring segregation in public schools unconstitutional.

"Such progress indicates that where State and local authorities have stood firm in their decision to obey the law and the Constitution, desegregation has taken place successfully. NAIRO also applauds those local organizations and private citizens who have loyally supported their school and governmental authorities in these localities.

"The Association calls upon the religious, civic and governmental bodies immediately to institute similar action in those states which have not as yet complied with the supreme law of the land.

"NAIRO condemns the threats, intimidations and violence by groups who are attempting to stifle the voices of those who are seeking to obtain compliance with the Constitution of the United States. It urges the Federal Government to use its full powers to halt efforts to prevent fulfillment of the Constitutional Command.

"Particularly reprehensible are attempts by certain state government leaders, organizations like the 'white' citizens councils, and the recent efforts of a national newspaper chain to smear responsible, widely respected organizations like the Southern Regional Council, NAACP, and the Fund for the Republic which have supported lawful and orderly methods for bringing about the desegregation of the public schools.

"NAIRO expresses its full confidence that the overwhelming majority of the American people in all sections of the country favor swift compliance with the Supreme Court decision to the end that, not only will our public schools be desegregated but also that the resultant integration will produce ever greater cooperation and understanding among all Americans."

TO: Members of NAIRO

FROM: Marshall Bragdon

Most of you are familiar with the method by which Sam Spiegler canvassed all members in September, 1958, for an input of ideas for a 'Statement of Concern' to be discussed and adopted at the NAIRO Conference last November. Copies of the final form adopted at Pittsburgh went to all members. You may well review it before responding to this Memo, which seeks the same kind of ideas, up-dated.

A broad formulation of intergroup workers' concerns and commentaries is sought, rather than separate resolutions on specific issues.

This year the Board requested me to involve all members at two stages of contribution, not one, before the conference. I now invite your written suggestions, as Sam did - - but next, in September, a draft embodying these ideas will be sent to all members for their quick reactions, before a revision is presented to the 1959 Conference in Puerto Rico, in mid-October. This offers everyone more 'say' in content and critique.

Therefore please send me--and as soon as possible--your views of the principal concerns in the intergroup field; the new trends which we should alertly analyze; overlooked needs; challenges to modernize our programs; opportunities for collaboration with other institutions and fields; cues for self-analysis and division of labor among different agencies; communication needs at all levels; and so on, etcetera...

Please give this your best thought, and get something on paper in whatever form you prefer--letter, outline, extended memo, etc. Send it to me at 105 City Hall, Cincinnati 2, Ohio, as early as possible. Your response will help NAIRO to speak with a clear strong voice.

TO: Members of NAIRO

FROM: Joseph P. Robison, Chairman
NAIRO Resolutions Committee

For the last two years, the Chairmen of the Resolutions Committee (Sam Spiegler and Marshall Bragdon, in the order named) have canvassed the members of NAIRO in advance of the Annual Conference for their suggestions as to what should be included in the "Statement of Concerns."

Being a slave to tradition, I am repeating this request with the urgent prayer that you will take an hour or two from your drab routine to put on record what you believe to be the special aspects of 1960 on which NAIRO should pronounce judgment.

I am writing this early in order to get your suggestions before you go away on your summer vacation. If we are to have a Preliminary Draft of the "Statement of Concern" for circulation well in advance of the Conference (November 15-18), it will have to be drafted during the summer and mailed to you in September.

This will not be possible unless your comments come in soon. Your reply should be sent to:

Joseph B. Robison

New York 28, New York

My best wishes to you for a pleasant summer vacation -- AFTER you reply to this request!

NAIRO RESOURCES AND PLANNING COMMITTEE

Dear Member:

You will remember that the major item on our agenda for the May 1st meeting is to be the purpose, role, and function of the Committee. To this end, each of us was asked to prepare a statement of our ideas on this subject; these were then to be distributed by mail.

I am enclosing the statements submitted by Herm Long, Marsh Bragdon, Fred Routh, Charlie Livermore, and myself.

I know that the others are planning to send in statements, and we will try to get these to you in advance of our meeting.

We meet, as you know, at 10 a.m. on Thursday, May 1, at the Building for Brotherhood, 43 West 57th Street. I look forward to seeing you then.

Resources and Planning Committee: Statement by Louis A. Radelet

TO: NAIRO Resources and Planning Committee
FROM: Lou Radelet

My ideas regarding the purpose of this Committee parallel those of Herman Long to a very considerable extent. Therefore, I am grateful that I've had the opportunity to read what Herman has to say before attempting a statement of my own.

To me this is the "long look and big idea" committee of NAIRO - with no policy or direction - setting power of its own, except as its recommendations may ultimately persuade the board to act, one way or another. This committee should see NAIRO as an instrument toward a purpose. What are the main issues or problem - areas in intergroup relations, foreseeable in the next year, the next five to ten years? What responsibility should NAIRO undertake with respect to these projected issues or problem-areas, in keeping with basic NAIRO purposes, methods and constituency? What resources, financial and otherwise, will NAIRO need to meet such responsibility? What steps can and should we take now toward securing such resources?

These are examples of the kind of fundamental questions to which I believe this committee should address itself. There is, I fully realize, no more difficult job than this kind of projective thinking. Yet we need no reminder of its transcending importance.

Best wishes.

Resources and Planning Committee: Letter from Herman Long

Dear Lou:

I appreciate the resume which you sent of the meeting of the Resources and Planning Committee held in Philadelphia. It gives evidence of a thoughtful and productive session and I regret that I could not be present to share in it.

The discussion on function of this committee is a very healthy sign, for it indicates that we are beginning to mark out the bounds of our authority and sharpen the role we can play effectively within this terrain.

I consider the two main lines of our function as a committee to be planning and policy. Although the former issues will easily and naturally arise in matters relating to the expansion and development of NAIRO -- as they already have -- they are not altogether unrelated to questions of policy. And then, on the other hand, there are matters of policy which may and do arise which have little to do with the detailed items of planning, such as membership, finance and special projects. These are equally important, and they relate to the question of how can NAIRO, as a professional organization, express its view and commitment on basic questions of intergroup relations which influence public opinion and public policy. At this point, I would say, we would be attempting to give a life and vitality to NAIRO which extends beyond the limited preoccupation with matters that are primarily "professional" and "organizational."

We do not and cannot, of course, become the policy-makers for NAIRO. But I do believe that one of our most important functions and roles is that of an adjunct policy body, both where organizational policy is concerned and public policy affecting the general field of our work and interest. We can initiate policy considerations; we can define and clarify; and we can recommend to the Board and NAIRO matters which reflect our commitment.

Like many organizations, we do not get at the major and bothersome policy questions in the process of our Board meetings and the annual conference discussions. We are constantly under the pressure of making the essential decisions about the details which keep us going as an organization. But a Resource and Planning body can get at these questions. It can aid the Board, stimulate it, challenge it, and get some of the things crystallized which it can never get around to considering.

Charlie Livermore is right, I think, in saying that we will need some two-day sessions to do this--perhaps at least two a year. And it could be stimulating and enjoyable for all of us. I do not believe we have the authority to issue public statements, unless the Board grants the committee that authority. But we can prepare the kind of statements which we would urge the Board and NAIRO to issue.

I think now of the tremendous void which exists in the functioning of the President's new commission on civil rights. Could we not help shape the direction in which this important public body should function by bringing to its attention the type situations involving voting rights which we believe are important to be investigated?

Well, I suppose I have said enough--or better, as much as I have to say. Although I am no longer on the Board, I will try to get to the May 1st meeting of the Resources and Planning Committee.

Thanks for your leadership, and best of wishes.

Resources and Planning Committee: Statement by F. B. Routh

ROLE AND RESPONSIBILITY OF NAIRO'S RESOURCES AND PLANNING COMMITTEE

The Resources and Planning Committee is a creature of the Board of Directors; it is responsible to the Board. Its function is to assess long-term trends in the field of intergroup relations and the professional needs of intergroup relations officials; to recommend to the Board, on the basis of its findings, such actions as will make NAIRO a more effective and well-respected professional association.

In pursuit of these goals it shall carry out such assignments as the Board may direct and carry on such other activities as may be necessary in the fulfillment of its obligations.

Resources and Planning Committee: Letter from Marshall Bragdon

Dear Lou:

I'll set down now some thoughts about the Resources & Planning Committee, despite my uninspired state, rather than waiting for a brainstorm.

First, I think that R&P should not low-rate its accomplishments: setting up the Internship Program; getting the NAIRO secretariat launched; reviewing the setup of Departments, Commissions and Committees through Burt Gordin's subcommittee; etc. After a few years of fumbling it is making substantial contributions to NAIRO.

Next, it seems to me that we should not discard the kernel idea of Chuck Livermore's plea that we make fuller use of the NAIRO leadership group (p. 2 of Minutes of R&P's Feb. 14 meeting). There was perhaps sufficient reason for the majority of those present to reject the proposal of 2-day quarterly meetings, reports designed to secure national publicity, etc. In that form the Board's role may have been challenged. But are we sure that some way may not be devised to utilize our (partly) "unused resource"? The Board has a lot of business; it is also in the business of giving more people the NAIRO, or overall, view of intergroup work. The Board and NAIRO both benefit if we can devise a challenging and continuing collateral function for veterans of NAIRO's first decade, who may be invaluable in "thinking out" the route of its second 10 years. Surely a division or sharing of this responsibility between these vets and the current Board can be worked out. I know one ex-President who is busier every year in his own job--yet he tries to respond, with his best thought, to any NAIRO call for counsel. Others, I'm sure, feel that way. And together their potential is an unique resource. How to put it to work specifically, however, is of course the design problem before us now.

Though this typist is still uninspired, he'll try to whack at this question a little further...If R&P's potential includes evaluative and planning elements, let's list some possible parts of NAIRO's total activity where experienced heads may lend extra help: (1) In the launching of a new Commission on Interreligious Relations, a tentative written plan of its aims, organization and procedures could be circulated by mail among R&P members. This, I believe, would elicit some cogent suggestions which might avoid certain childhood diseases of the new body. Why not try it? (2) A new venture like the Resolutions Committee (new in the sense that it has yet to implement an idea now three years old) could also utilize R&P, if Sam Spiegler wanted to try some ideas-in-draft or procedural proposals on R&P members. (3) I suspect that analysis of the minutes of almost any Board meeting would turn up one or two policy discussions of some importance which did not carry the question at hand quite to the point of sound consensus and decision. Such items might be informally circularized among R&P members. Any final decision would be the Board's, but between meetings this process might tap some additional insights. (4) On a proposed program element like the scheduled bi-monthly issue of Commission Reports, R&P could properly help to evaluate its working. (5) Certainly R&P has a role in working at difficult but attractive proposals like the idea of a clearinghouse, or the how-to-do-it of formalizing "services to agencies" as a source of new income. (It just happens that this member doesn't have anything bright to say about either item right now. Can't be red hot all the time...)

In several of the examples above, mail communication is assumed to be a feasible thing. It should of course be supplemented by adequate meeting time at the annual conferences, plus two or more meetings in between, at the most convenient place (New York presumably). Finally, I think that R&P can function more and more fruitfully because most of its members like nothing better than to get together and talk their heads off; some of their talk makes very good sense; more than a few have been known to answer letters (!) in NAIRO's service--and with a bit of planning the result can be increasingly valuable.

Resources and Planning Committee: Letter from Charles Livermore

Dear Mr. Radelet:

It seems to me, when I review the things to which the Resources and Planning Committee was supposed to direct its attention, that we missed the target by several thousand miles.

I gather that we are specifically trying to raise $15,000 by 1958. There is a relationship between this and the concern which I expressed in connection with my motion which was defeated. It seems to me that, until NAIRO develops some function as a spokesman for the professional worker, its function will remain somewhat nebulous except as a conference giver and a structure maker for the field. It seems to me that professional people in the field can give some personality and substance to intergroup relations, if we can be discreet enough to avoid a social action role on the one hand, or mere philosophizing on the other. It seems to me that NAIRO should try to be more itself as an organization with personality and role and that we should not become a renderer of services except in very discreet areas.

Returning to the problem of finances: It would seem to me that we ought to try to engage the services of a professional fund raiser. This may appear to be passing the buck, but it seems to me that unless John personally will take this job, we have to find some other outside force to get it in motion. I doubt if our committee will raise anything unless it gets this kind of assistance. Unless this happens, it seems to me that very likely we will slip back into the same set up we had before the internship program came along.

NAIRO

PURPOSE

The National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials (NAIRO) was established in 1947 as an organization of individuals concerned with advancing intergroup relations knowledge and skills, improving the standards of intergroup relations practice, and furthering the understanding and acceptance of the goals and principles of intergroup relations work.

To carry out these purposes, NAIRO seeks to further:

- EXCHANGE OF EXPERIENCE AND KNOWLEDGE among individuals and agencies concerned with racial, religious, ethnic, and cultural relationships.

- STUDY, ANALYSIS, AND CONDUCT OF RESEARCH on problems and developments affecting intergroup relations.

- COLLECTION, COMPILATION, AND DISSEMINATION of information and ideas regarding programs, methods and techniques.

- ADVANCEMENT OF THE SCIENCE, PROCESSES, AND ART of intergroup relations, and improvement of the standards of work in the field.

MEMBERSHIP

Membership in NAIRO is open to any individual subscribing to its basic purposes. There are two classes of membership, ACTIVE and ASSOCIATE, and dues are $15 per year.

- ACTIVE or voting membership is open to any individual primarily engaged in intergroup relations: in a professional staff capacity, as a recognized authority or as a member of the governing body of an agency in this field.

- ASSOCIATE or non-voting membership — open to all others — carries with it all privileges of participation and services, except the right to vote or hold office.

ORGANIZATION

NAIRO's program is carried out through its:

- ANNUAL CONFERENCE. NAIRO members meet annually to exchange ideas, formulate policy, develop program, and elect officers. The 1958 Conference will be held in Pittsburgh.

- BOARD OF DIRECTORS. Elected by the membership at the annual meeting, the Board of Directors governs the Association, determining policy between the yearly sessions.

- COMMISSIONS. Six Commissions, organized around areas of common interest in intergroup relations, discuss and study basic professional considerations underlying major issues in education, housing and family life, manpower utilization, other civil rights, interreligious relations. Any member may participate in the activities of the commission of his choice.

- DEPARTMENTS. NAIRO's Departments seek to aid professionals in their work through the exchange of information on developments, techniques, and approaches in similar types of agencies, i.e., muncipal, local private, state public, national private, and federal services. All NAIRO members automatically become affiliated with a department according to their agency identification.

- LOCAL NAIRO GROUPS. In cities or areas where there are a number of NAIRO members, local NAIRO groups have been organized to promote regular discussion of matters of common concern to intergroup relations workers.

- STANDING COMMITTEES. Organizational development and program are guided by various appointive committees of the membership, including those dealing with such substantive topics as professional standards, educational and professional training, and interprofessional relations.

- NATIONAL OFFICE. NAIRO maintains a central headquarters office in New York City to serve its members, committees, and conferences. Its Executive Secretary travels extensively around the country, meeting with NAIRO members and local groups.

ACTIVITIES

Activities and publications of NAIRO are designed to advance its purposes and serve its members.

- PROFESSIONAL TRAINING PROGRAM. Six foundations cooperate in a NAIRO-initiated program of on-the-job training for professional recruits to the field of intergroup relations. Sixteen young people were trained in agencies across the nation during the first year of operation.
- PERSONNEL REGISTRY. Available without charge to members seeking employment, and to intergroup relations agencies seeking personnel, this service regularly publicizes job openings among those who have requested listing.
- SPECIAL MEETINGS. In recent years, NAIRO has sponsored several special conferences, two on research in intergroup relations and one on policy-community relations. As the need arises, others will be arranged.

PUBLICATIONS

- NAIRO REPORTER, a bulletin of events and trends in intergroup relations. Published monthly except August and September. Free to members; non-members, $3.00 per year.
- JOURNAL OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS, comprising the substantive study reports of the six NAIRO Commissions. Published bimonthly. Free to members; non-members, $6.00 per year.
- NAIRO NEWSLETTER, a monthly review of NAIRO activities and membership news.

22 January 1958

TO: NAIRO Interns and Supervisors

FROM: John V.P. Lassoe, Jr.

SUBJECT: Internship Seminar

It will not be possible to hold the NAIRO Internship Seminar during March, and you will no longer need to reserve the tentative dates, March 1-14, about which I wrote you earlier this month.

Some of the interns and supervisors found March to be a very inconvenient month. In addition, the Educational and Professional Training Committee (which NAIRO had designated as the Internship advisory group) felt that more time was needed for adequate preparation.

The religious holidays in late March and April will force postponement until at least April 14, with the strong likelihood that the Seminar will not take place until mid-May.

I will write again as soon as definite dates have been established. I would appreciate hearing from you about any commitments that would interfere with a late April or May session.

I hope that this postponement does not seriously affect your plans or schedule. I can assure you that the delay will mean an even better seminar.

Dear John:

I regret that I did not get to the NCRAC evaluation meeting in Philadelphia. I am happy, however, to hear that you contemplate another march through Georgia. We will be happy to welcome you but I fear the Governor would regard it much in the same manner as he would another person, whose name cannot be mentioned, who once marched from Atlanta to the sea.

The best dates during the first two weeks in March or the third through the seventh (3 - 7). I shall be out of Atlanta the following week. I hope this doesn't complicate matters too much.

Y'all come. Warm regards.

Dear Fred:

I understand that I may see you at the N C R A C meeting in Philadelphia. In case not, I think that I should warn you that I contemplate another march through Georgia. As you can see from the enclosed, top priority has to be given to our Miami intern, whom I have not met, but if Miami chooses dates that permit a visit to Atlanta at a time convenient for you, I would want to stop by for a day or so to catch up with Routh, Garrison and Company.

Will you let me know your best dates and worst dates during the first two weeks in March so that I can try to work out a southern tour that will upset the delicate human relations balance as little as possible. Or do you have enough local tension without another visit from me?

Missed you at the Board meeting. It was a wonderfully productive session, and I will report at length when I see you.

Best wishes.

Sincerely,

John

Dear Mr. Liebner:

Thank you for your letter confirming dates for my forthcoming trip to Miami. I find that I will be able to come any time during the first two weeks of March and I would appreciate it if you would choose the two day - three, if you think it advisable - that you would find most convenient. I will plan to visit Washington and Atlanta on the same trip - before or after Miami depending on the days that you choose.

I will be very happy to speak for you when I am in Miami and I invite you to schedule me as you see fit. I think that my best topics would be: (a) the Internship Program (if there is a group that might be interested in that), (b) a birdseye view of intergroup relations across the United States (based on my travels over the past six months), and (c) teenage intergroup relations in a changing neighborhood (drawing on my recent experience as youth activities coordinator for the Lower Eastside Neighborhood Associations here in New York). I am not sure that any of these are particularly exciting but I do not pretend to be "expert" about much else in the field of intergroup relations.

I will probably have to ask you the impossible - namely, to reserve a hotel room for my stay on whatever dates you choose for my visit and may I hear from you as soon as those dates are selected so that I may advise people in Atlanta and Washington.

Best wishes.

Sincerely,

John V.P. Lassoe, Jr.

March 17, 1958

Dear Fred:

Since I did not have the opportunity to talk with you again before leaving your fair city, I thought that I might profitably incorporate in a letter some of my impressions of Machion and his reaction to the first months of the internship. This is based on my few talks with him and with others, and it suffers from just that fact - a brief and superficial exposure, at best.

It is my feeling - based more on impressions than on anything he said - that Machion is somewhat confused and perhaps a little unhappy over what he sees as the lack of a clearcut plan of training and schedule for the future. I am sure that he likes SRC and the staff but I am not sure that he knows his role and function.

He spoke quite frankly about his difficulties in writing, and he seems very grateful to John and you for your help and patience in this. He naturally likes this part of the training least - and enjoys meeting people at conferences most. But this must be obvious....

I think that his eagerness to please stems from many causes, and I follow your advice about not trying to be an amateur psychologist. I will say that I realized after talking to him that he suffers from job insecurity among other things; since he is not sure if he will be kept on the SRC staff, he asked me about post-internship placement elsewhere - in a manner that suggested that he was quite conscious of his limitations.

His personal dilemma of race is really quite acute. His sensitivity and consciousness of race is sometimes painful, on the one hand; he seems even more convinced that he wants to continue working in the South, on the other. And, in between, he seems to see the many problems that this poses.

Underlying or overlaying all this is the fact that he is extremely likeable (I must say that I had a grand time with him that evening, and I felt that he felt relaxed with me), more naive than misguided in some of his ideas on class and caste, and not without considerable personal human relations potential. But I fear that he is going to continue to need a good deal of your time, and John's, just to talk out some of the attitudes and blokks that he seems to have.

I guess (20,000 words later) that my main impression boils down to a need for a little more direction, definition, and plan for Machion in the months to come. Given this security, he may be able to relax a little more, which would help him accept something of a frontal assault on a few of his naive attitudes (and this he will get, willy nilly, from the other interns at the Seminar). And this may do the trick....

not so very clever after all - the letter bounced right back! Boo to the----------

And I hope too that this was the sort of comment (insight?) that you wanted me to pass on to you. Wasn't I clever to dig up your home address in the A*T*L*A*N*T*A City Directory?

I really enjoyed my evening with you, too, friend. It was, as usual, fun being with you - and the cuisine improves each time if that is possible. Incidentally, I had an equally profitable and almost as pleasant time in Miami - including one brief but good talk with Bill Williams. (The DCCCR is applying for an internship half-grant, it being obvious that they cannot now raise the money to keep Stan Leibner on their staff after his internship. There are a few details (staff supervision, recipient for the grant - since DCCCR is not tax-exempt, training outline, etc.) that need to be clarified, but I would say that their chances are good.)

Best wishes for now. Will we see you in New York in May? Resources and Planning Committee meets on May 1; ?
Board, as you know, on May 2 & 3. And have you given any ?
thought to the possibility of lending yourself to the ?
Internship Seminar for a week?? ?

Sincerely,

John

Dear Fred:

Lou Radelet asked me to write regarding the schedule for the meeting of the Resources and Planning Committee. An all-day meeting seems desirable, and Lou has called this for 10 a.m. on Thursday, May 1. With a pleasant break for lunch, it should end about 5 p.m. This will seem like a lot of meeting but it is a good time for this Committee to get started on its important work; a year from now, NAIRO's future will be at the crisis stage.

Best wishes, as always.

Dear John:

Thank you for your letter of March 13th. I, too, regret that we missed each other before you left Atlanta for there were several things I wanted to discuss with you. However, there will be ample opportunity, I hope, when I am in New York for the NAIRO Board meeting -- May 2nd and 3rd.

I have discussed with Harold and Garry the question of tax exemption for our internship program which you raised in your letter. It is our reluctant decision that SRC should not apply for such exemption for the following reasons, which I ask you to treat confidentially:

1. We exist in an unfriendly political atmosphere and our actions are subject to careful scrutiny and, with the least excuse, there are those who would insist on another full review of our entire tax exempt status. Having spent six weeks in this procedure in the last eighteen months we are not anxious to go through the ordeal again.

2. In our publicity seeking an intern we referred to "salary" and not "grant". We have continued to use that language. Therefore, any investigation would uncover this unhappy factor and would further prejudice a request for tax exemption for the intern.

Continued . . .

3. The Jacksonville district office has refused a similar request from the Florida agency participating in the internship program. Florida is not a hard core area; Georgia is. Local opinion has a strong influence on district office decisions.

All best regards.

Dear Fred:

I am sorry that I missed seeing you again, at least to say farewell. My Atlanta stay was certainly pleasant as well as profitable, and I thoroughly enjoyed both evenings there.

Had I seen you again (and had I remembered), I would have discussed with you the question of the tax exemption for Machion. Specifically, I think that you should apply to the District Director for a ruling as to whether or not his internship stipend constitutes a fellowship - and is, therefore, exempt from both income tax and social security. He could get a very profitable rebate on past salary withheld and could also collect more from you in the future.

The enclosed carbon might well be a model letter; it brought the right ruling, in any case! Incidentally, a similar ruling was issued in Cleveland and Chicago, although we are not yet mentioning any of these other rulings (for fear of upsetting their neat little applecart). The Jacksonville (FLa.) district office ruled against exemption, but this will be appealed. It seems that they dwelt on the word "intern" (medical interns are not exempt, and I would therefore avoid this word) and on the supposition that the grant aided the agency more than the intern. In that connection I would stress the primary value to the apprentice, and the fact that the program was developed for the benefit of the individual being trained, and play down any return (in work value) to the agency.

Although Mrs. Brisbane need not be mentioned by name, this ruling from your District Director would also apply to her. I discussed this with Grace Hamilton, and we agreed that - in view of the delicate financial arrangement at AUL - it would be better for Machion to attempt to establish the precedent.

Good luck to you (and Garry) in this.

Sincerely,

John

District Director of Internal Revenue

Attention: Review Section

Dear Sir:

The San Francisco Urban League is the receipient of a grant from two foundations totaling $5000 to undertake a special program of training of a young person who may be interested in eventually entering a professional career in the field of Intergroup relations. This internship or apprenticeship program is sponsored nationally by the National Association of Intergroup Relations and the Urban League is one of several organizations selected to provide the training.

The grant from the foundation is to be used specifically to provide a stipend for the apprentice selected by the agency and to cover travel costs and other necessary expenses of the training program. Two other organizations in San Francisco have been selected as training centers for apprentices.

We have been informed that training stipends of this kind (equivalent to a scholarship or fellowship) may be exempt from income and social security tax payments. The purpose of this letter, therefore, is to request an Internal Revenue Service ruling as to whether the stipend paid to our apprentice under the terms of the grant as described above are exempt from the payment of income and social security taxes.

We would very much appreciate a reply at your very earliest convenience.

Very truly yours,

Seaton W. Manning

I have not yet had a chance to discuss with Machion the possibility of working with the Back-of-the-Yards Movement in Chicago. I have just returned to the office after additional field trips since I left on my vacation.

26 June 1958

Dear Fred:

The enclosed check is mighty small remuneration for your beautiful job as the leader of our evaluation sessions at the recent Seminar. I had never seen you in that role before; you are certainly talented, Dad!

We accept your excellent speech on "The South Today" as a contribution but we are no less grateful to you for arranging your schedule so as to be there for it. And you certainly gave the interns the information and insight that they wanted and needed.

Before he left, Machion told me about a possible opening with the Atlanta Housing Authority. I hope that he can get such a post - for reasons that we have discussed. It will also keep him in a "ready" spot should Saul Alinsky call him for a job with the Back-of-the-Yards Movement in Chicago. I assume that Machion discussed with you his promising conversation with Lester Hunt of that organization. I concur with Bob and you in the judgment that Machion is not yet ready for an intergroup relations post; much as I like him, I go one step further in wondering if he is really cut out for this field at all. I still seek the right opening for him in a Northern agency but I am not too confident that it will come along. Machion now agrees that he would work better and be happier outside the South, and this is an important step.

Many thanks again for your good contributions to a wonderful Seminar. Nothing happened during the second week to change my opinion that this was indeed a memorable event in NAIRO's history.

Sincerely,

John

Dear John:

I think you will be interested in the enclosed correspondence. Garry has been interviewed for a position with the Atlanta Housing Authority. In the event this does not work out, there is the possibility of employment with the Urban League somewhere up North where there is a shortage of housing secretaries. For these reasons we thought it was in Garry's best interest to give him a good background in the field of housing. We have the full cooperation of the Atlanta Urban League in this proposal.

All good regards.

NOTICE OF ANNUAL MEETING OF THE ASSOCIATION

TO: Members of the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials, Inc.

FROM: Sidney Lawrence, Secretary

The Annual Meeting of the Association will be held on Wednesday morning, November 19, at 9:30 a.m. in the Penn-Sheraton Hotel, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. It will continue through Friday, November 21.

As required by the By-Laws of the Association (Article XVI), I submit to you the following proposed amendments to the By-Laws - including both the verbatim proposal and an explanation of its effect. Each of these will be voted upon at the Annual Meeting, a simple majority being sufficient for adoption.

A. Concerning Officers of the Association: Proposed by Paul Klein and Recommended to the membership by the Board of Directors.

- In Article VI, Section I, first sentence, place a period after the word "Secretary" and delete the rest of the sentence.

(The effect of this amendment would be to abolish the requirement that the six officers of the Association "shall be regular members of the Board at the time of their election to office, or shall have been regular members of the Board in the year immediately preceding their election to office." Under the proposed amendment, any member (in good standing) of the Association would be eligible for nomination and election to office.)

B. Concerning Regional Chairmen: Proposed by the Board of Directors and Recommended to the membership.

- In Article VII, Section I, sentence I, change "twenty-eight (28) members" to "thirty-two (32) members;" and in setence 3, change "four (4) Regional Chairmen of the Association, from four separate geographic regions of the country" to "eight (8) Regional Chairmen of the Association, from eight separate geographic regions of the country."

(The effect of this amendment would be to permit the President to appoint eight regional chairmen from as many regions, instead of four. The maximum number of Directors would be increased from 28 to 32 to make this possible, since each regional chairman serves as ex officio member of the Board.)

C. Concerning Membership Categories: Proposed by George Culberson et al, and Recommended to the membership by the Board of Directors.

- In Article IV, Section I, sentence I, change "two classes" to "three classes", and add after subsection (b) the following subsection:

"c. Student: Any person enrolled in a recognized college or university and working toward a degree with the intention of entering the field of intergroup relations."

- In Article V, Section I, change "two classes" to "three classes", and insert as Section 4 (the present Section 4 becoming Section 5) the following:

"4. Each Student member shall be entitled to receive all regular informational services and to participate in conferences of the Association."

(The effect of this amendment would be to establish a special class of membership for bona fide students of intergroup relations. NOTE: Although the dues schedule is not part of the By-Laws, it is the intention of the Board of Directors to recommend - if this revision is adopted - that Student dues be set at five ($5) dollars per year.)

Dear Harold:

I have been meaning for some time to write to you personally about membership in NAIRO. Happily, our annual pre-Conference membership drive gives me a perfect opportunity to urge you to join our ranks. I do feel that you should be part of NAIRO, and I hope that you will want to apply for membership.

Membership advantages are set forth in detail in the enclosed brochure, which I hope you will scan. I can add little to it, except perhaps to underscore the importance of participation in a new profession's efforts to raise its standards and improve its performance - to the benefit of the broad goals that we all share. Basically, NAIRO's services and activities, while always valuable to us in our everyday work, are oriented to this long-range and continuing professional growth.

If you should join at this time, you will take advantage of an annual courtesy period for new members - fifteen months membership at the dues rate for twelve. This means simply that your dues will be paid through 1959 (all NAIRO memberships expire automatically on the last day of each calendar year).

I am well aware that Fred has been after you for some time, but it occurred to me that you might welcome a written invitation, especially since this is the time for a bargain affiliation.

Best wishes.

John

SUBJECT: NAIRO Statement on Civil Rights

I am enclosing a copy of the Statement on Civil Rights adopted at our Conference in Pittsburgh two weeks ago. It is a forthright statement, and a good one, and the Board of Directors is anxious that it receive maximum publicity and attention.

Please bring it to the attention of your local press, your Board and membership, other intergroup relations agencies, and interested community groups. You may want to reproduce it - in whole or in part - for use in your community; it might provide interesting material for discussion at one of your meetings.

We have a few extra copies available at this office but, if you need any substantial quantity, we shall have to ask you to reproduce it independently -- for which you have NAIRO's permission.

Needless to say, we would be grateful for your comments, copies of any publicity on the statement, and reports of any discussion of it. We want to pull all this together for a report in an early issue of the Newsletter.

ITEM: NAIRO membership now totals 454, an all-time high. It would be wonderful to reach 500 by December 31st. Any candidates?

ITEM: The Annual Meeting ratified San Juan, Puerto Rico as the site of our 1959 Conference, and San Francisco as the site of the 1961 meeting. Bids are now sought for 1960. Is your city a possibility??? (That is not a typographical error; it is 1960 that is open....)

ITEM: Conference Proceedings are being prepared and will be mailed to all members on or about January 1. In the meantime, I am sorry to say, copies of the excellent speeches are not available.

STATEMENT ON CIVIL RIGHTS adopted by TWELFTH ANNUAL CONFERENCE
of the
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS OFFICIALS

November 21, 1958

Penn-Sheraton Hotel, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Preamble

No greater challenge faces the contemporary world than that of perfecting the means whereby free men may live together in mutual acceptance with respect for differences. Indeed, this is the crucial challenge of our time; and it confronts with evermounting urgency every international body, every government, every community, every institution of our society. Upon our success in meeting that challenge may rest our best prospects for world peace, domestic tranquility and the common welfare of mankind.

Intergroup relations work is focused on that challenge. Its goal is a society in which men and groups can live comfortably and creatively together notwithstanding the differences among them. This is possible only where men are equally free - free to share equally in the opportunities of a free society, free to achieve social and political change, free to worship as they will, free to be different.

While there has been movement in this direction, it is distressingly evident in our own land that the world still is far from having succeeded in building such a society. Justifiably proud as we are to be the possessers of a Constitution guaranteeing equal rights and equal protections to all without regard to race, color, religion, or ethnic origin, and priding ourselves, as we justly may, upon being a nation of laws, we are yet faced with a grave challenge to those Constitutional guarantees and to the orderly processes of government that are designed to secure them equally to all our people.

> Meeting in twelfth annual conference, the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials views this immediate challenge as the first and most urgent concern at this time to all who are committed to the improvement of intergroup relations. We are convinced that, so long as equality is denied to any citizen or group of citizens in any of the states of the Union, so long as the authority of our highest courts is flouted, so long will our efforts be impeded and the realization of our aims delayed. This statement accordingly is limited to these currently urgent concerns.

Emerging Support for Desegregation in South

It may well be that a turning point recently has been reached in the struggle for racial desegregation of the public schools. Some of the costs of "massive resistance" have made themselves felt. Public schools have been closed, imposing hardships upon white as well as Negro pupils. A comprehensive ruling by the United States

Supreme Court has stricken every vestige of legality from all schemes and stratagems for evading its earlier desegregation ruling, whether now or in the future. The promises of some southern governors, attorneys general, and political leaders, that the mandate of the Supreme Court could be circumvented or countermanded by interposition of state authority have been shown to be empty. The growing wave of violence, unmistakably stemming from and given sanction by the defiance and evasion of law by public officials, has brought home the inevitable consequences of this course of action.

As a result, an articulate segment of public opinion in the South has begun to advocate compliance with the Supreme Court rulings.

A growing number of people not only recognize that they have been misled by their political officials, but realize also that, in standing aside from the controversy heretofore, they have defaulted on their duty and contributed by their silence to the creation of an intolerable situation. The monopoly upon public expression of views on desegregation, that has been held by the intransigent segregationists, is being challenged.

Desegregation is being debated in the South. The beginnings of a dynamic shift of public opinion are discernible.

> We believe this emergent sentiment must be channelled into constructive roles in the continuing conflict, through the wise and effective utilization in the period immediately ahead, by both government and private organizations, of the processes of law and the approaches and techniques of intergroup relations.
> This will be best achieved if the processes of law and the approaches of intergroup relations are conceived, not as alternatives, but as complementary.

Law and Education as Instruments of Social Change

Both law and education are instruments of social change. Law operates not only as an instrument of enforcement, but as a conditioner of conduct and of attitude. This is especially so in a democracy. Authoritarian governments may use laws as repressive devices, but in our system law is looked upon as an expression of the popular will, and government as the instrument of its effectuation. Most people, accordingly, abide by law as a matter of course. Law against discriminatory behavior thus inhibits as well as prohibits such behavior by the prejudiced, and even tends to reduce impulses to such behavior, while it supports and encourages the unprejudiced in the practice of equality.

The reverse is likewise true: law imposing discrimination, so general in our South, has sustained and nurtured prejudice. It is ironically notable, indeed, that many who have decried the use of law against discrimination on the ground that prejudice must first be overcome by moral suasion are among the most vigorous defenders of law to enforce discrimination.

The sanction of law, in brief, is a potent factor in the promotion of equality of opportunity, complementing and in turn complemented by positive educational and intergroup relations approaches.

Nor are the sanctions of law exclusively punitive or coercive. Effective positive incentives to compliance may be provided, thus adding tangible rewards to the impact of the moral weight of law in fashioning conduct.

No law, however, is self-implementing, whether it be court ruling or legislative enactment. Law does not, of itself, effect change; it merely provides authority or mandate; it has to be used, otherwise it remains a dead letter.

Need for Effective National Executive Leadership

Recognition of the dynamics of these relationships is essential to the effective discharge of responsibility by leadership in a democracy. Such leadership is not effectively discharged solely by appeals to the hearts and consciences of men by exhorting them to change their attitudes, without at the same time utilizing law as a creative instrument in bringing about changes in conduct.

In the course of evolution of our government, the office of the President has come to be regarded as the source of national leadership, the repository of the conscience of the nation, the originator of major policies and directions for the realization of overarching national purposes.

> We look to the President, therefore, to assume more fully this leadership role using the great moral authority, prestige and influence of his office to interpret the Supreme Court ruling as just, to assert the duty of responsible citizens to comply and to make unmistakably plain the intent of the federal government to see that the ruling is implemented "with all deliberate speed."

We believe that with such executive leadership the growing movement of resistance can be stopped.

We feel that the Justice Department's intervention in litigations during the past several months, the altered tenor of the public statements made by the President, the activities of the Civil Rights Commission, the action of the President in ordering the Federal Bureau of Investigation to make its facilities fully available in the investigation of dynamitings, all afford ground for hope that the determined federal action so long needed will at last be pressed.

Protecting the Right to Vote

It is particularly urgent that such actions be taken to secure the full exercise of the franchise to all our citizens.

Political freedom in a democracy underlies all other freedoms. And nothing will more certainly alter the political climate in the South, the attitudes toward civil rights of elected officials from sheriff to governor, or the character of the southern representation in the Congress than an increase in Negro use of the ballot.

To a marked degree, law and education must be used in close concert in this connection. To make the ballot available to qualified Negro voters will require energetic and determined legal steps by both federal agencies and individual plaintiffs. To assure full use of the ballot by Negro voters will require extensive efforts to overcome the inertia and apathy that are the inevitable product of long repression.

On the legal side, the Civil Rights Commission should press its already initiated investigation with vigor and expedition; it should initiate similar investigations in all parts of the country, holding and studying and analyzing voting laws in all states.

The Justice Department, through its Civil Rights Division should move swiftly and energetically to prevent interference with voting by intervening in suits challenging restrictive voting statutes on Constitutional grounds and with other appropriate steps.

Needed Federal Legislation

We believe further legislative action is necessary to clothe executive agencies of the federal government with authority to seek to compel compliance.

> The Justice Department should be empowered to initiate actions in federal courts against denials of any civil right, as it now has authority to initiate actions in cases of infringements of voting rights.

To permit the burden of litigation in support of a declared public policy to rest upon those denied the protection of that declared policy and economically least able to bear the costs of the litigation is both unjust and illogical.

We believe that federal intervention is desirable in investigating the lawless acts of violence against persons and property created by the climate of official defraud of law.

> Congress should provide explicitly for such investigation in cases of assaults by dynamite or other explosives against public buildings, houses of worship and residence.
> Congress should act to afford federal assistance, in the form of technical services, financial grants, and other aids, to those school districts prepared to move promptly toward compliance with the Supreme Court decision.

Such legislation to provide incentives to compliance would be consistent with the creative use of law as one of the instruments available to our society for moving in the direction of desirable economic, social and political conditions, and inhibiting or impeding movement in undesirable or destructive directions. In considerable part, the laws enacted by the Congress creating and defining the functions of many of the agencies of government in the fields of health, education, social welfare, business, labor, agriculture are such laws.

The Senate Filibuster

Standing as a barrier to the enactment of every proposed civil rights law is the Senate filibuster. So potent is this weapon that the mere threat of its use has been sufficient on many occasions to cause pending legislation to be put aside without action or to prevent bills being taken up at all.

> We believe, therefore, that it is imperative that the Senate at the opening of the 86th Congress assert its right as a new body to make its own rules and adopt procedures that will permit a majority to bring any questions to a vote after opportunity for full debate.

Opening Channels of Communication

Effective action to achieve equality in the South is hampered by a wide-spread attack on the right to express opposition to the official policy of segregation. A large number of states have adopted laws designed to cripple or destroy anti-segregation organizations by such methods as compelling disclosure of membership, prohibiting legitimate support of court actions to test unjust laws and imposing burdensome registration requirements. The investigative powers of Federal and State legislative committees have been used to harass proponents of integration. Economic power, even physical violence, are likewise a constant threat.

These factors make it difficult to meet one of the most pressing needs of the South, the establishment and maintenance of channels of communication among the many groups and elements favoring or prepared to accept compliance with the desegregation rulings of the Supreme Court. We are convinced that the many groups and individuals, whose silence has been due to their fear of isolating and exposing themselves should they speak out, constitute a large and potentially influential part of the white population of the South and that they need only be given the means of concerting their views and drawing a sense of security from each other, to become a major force for decency and racial justice.

This makes it all the more important for citizens and citizen groups throughout the nation to speak out against the effort to stifle anti-segregation protest. It must be recognized that this effort is aimed not only at maintaining racial inequality but also at denying the basic constitutional guarantees of freedom of speech, press, and association. The weapons that are being used today against those favoring compliance with the Supreme Court decisions can be used tomorrow against any unpopular group. All Americans have a direct stake in the defeat of this attack on our democratic institutions.

COMBINING LEGAL AND NON-LEGAL APPROACHES

Legal process and non-legal approaches are inseparable in effecting social change. The non-legal approaches are uniquely those of the intergroup relations field; it is of the utmost importance that they be utilized. They are available, in some measure, through voluntary organizations, which may be enlisted by government in coordinated approaches. We believe they should be more extensively employed directly by government, in conjunction with legal process.

The creation of staff positions for intergroup relations advisors at policy-making and administrative levels in city governments, state education departments, federal agencies such as the Bureau of Education, the Department of Justice, the Department of Labor, etc., would do much to infuse government with an approach that does not rest exclusively on the coercive sanction of law to obtain compliance, but rather recognizes the value of law as an instrument for moving people toward acceptable modes of behavior and toward more desirable attitudes.

Segregation has been outlawed. But to end it will require sustained efforts to use the conflict over its prohibition in constructive ways within the framework of the law.

Among the techniques that must be used in conjunction to achieve desegregation of public schools are such legal steps as prompt investigation by grand juries of incitement to unlawful resistance, with prompt indictment and trial of accused inciters; and the issuance of firm orders and unambiguous announcements of policy by the authorities. Other steps include the organization and coordination of voluntary groups supporting compliance; public statements by ministerial and religious bodies, sermons, declarations of support for the authorities by civic, labor, business and other organizations.

STATE ANTI-DISCRIMINATION LAWS

Segregation and other forms of discrimination are not limited to the South; they exist in many, if not all, of the large industrial centers of the entire nation. Wherever they exist they must be eliminated. However, while the sanctions of law are being misused in some southern states in unconstitutional attempts to perpetrate injustice, they are being used increasingly in some other states in other parts of the nation in support of Constitutional guarantees of equal rights and equal freedoms. Twenty states now have civil rights statutes of varying degrees of comprehensiveness, with administration and enforcement in the hands of official state agencies. In addition, a much larger number of ordinances are in effect in municipalities, many of which also have official agencies for their administration.

The enactment of such laws should be extended; existing laws should be strengthened, especially to give civil rights agencies power to initiate complaints, where such power is lacking; the work of agencies administering the laws should be enlarged; and the best skills and insights of intergroup relations should be employed in the creative utilization of the laws.

Discrimination in Housing

In the South, the issue of equality of opportunity is being fought out primarily in the context of the school desegregation struggle. Elsewhere, equality of access to available housing is the major key to problems of segregation and discrimination. Segregation by neighborhood is the inevitable breeder of every other form of segregation - in educational facilities, welfare services, public accommodations and community organization. Under the conditions that exist in virtually all our major urban centers, moreover, it is a means of perpetuating inequalities and contributing toward intergroup hostilities, antagonisms and resentment.

We regard it as essential that all our people have access to a completely open housing market. We believe that comprehensive and fully enforceable laws to this end should be enacted (where not already in effect) by all states and municipalities.

Federal Housing Policies and Practices

Many factors and influences combine to sustain our present segregated neighborhoods and communities: group prejudices in the majority population group, practices current in the housing industry and among real estate brokers and builders, policies and practices of governmental agencies and public officials. The Federal Housing Administration, although committed in principle to "equality of opportunity .... irrespective of race, color, creed or national origin," does not control the discriminatory practices of private builders or lenders.

Thus, indirectly and by default, federal policies have stimulated segregation by making insured financing available - through FHA, FNMA and VA - to private builders who build segregated housing.

Other agencies of the federal government are making funds available for the construction of public and redevelopment housing that is expressly set up on a segregated or discriminatory basis. State laws requiring segregation are accepted as binding despite court decisions plainly establishing their invalidity. Finally, the Race Relations Service of the Housing and Home Finance Agency has been steadily reduced in strength and power.

We would like to call attention to recent statements by the Administrator of the Federal Housing program indicating disagreement with the accepted national policy of nondiscrimination in the expenditure of Federal funds. These statements undermine the whole national policy, encourage segregationists, and lead to confusion among those looking to the Federal Government for leadership. It is especially critical because of the close relationship between discrimination in housing and all other forms of discrimination.

The time has come for this hodge-podge of conflicting policies and practices to be replaced by a single consistent definitive policy, firmly administered, that will make the federal housing programs the instruments not only of more adequate housing for all but of housing for an integrated democratic society.

Aside from standing in the way of the improvement of intergroup relations, housing segregation bears within it the seed of deterioration and decay of our cities. Our cities are being gradually emptied of economically more self-sufficient elements, which are moving to racially and sometimes religiously exclusive suburbs. The central urban areas, thus abandoned, may grow into great ghettoes. The new political leadership of the cities is likely to be relatively inexperienced. Already much retail business and some industry, not dependent upon a mass supply of relatively unskilled labor, are moving into the suburbs. Declines in municipal tax revenues are inevitable. In these circumstances, deterioration of public services of all sorts is almost certain.

Population mobility is a characteristic of a healthy modern society. It should not be impeded. But a radically new and more imaginative approach to housing is imperative to deal with it. Such an approach would eschew the multiplication of housing projects designed to accommodate particular economic levels; such projects encourage racial and ethnic segregation. Rather, a new conceptualization is needed of the kinds of integrated communities we wish to create; we should plan for communities, not merely for shelter. In such an approach is to be found the hope for solution of our housing segregation.

The wide extent and destructive effects of discrimination in housing have just been convincingly described in the report of the Commission on Race and Housing established by the Fund for the Republic. This report, "Where Shall We Live?" based on a three-year study, fully documents the existence of housing segregation and presents cogent recommendations for its elimination. We strongly endorse those recommendations and particularly call for prompt implementation of the suggestion that the President appoint a committee to see to the elimination of racial discrimination in all federal housing and urban renewal programs.

Civil Rights a National Problem

Civil Rights are, in every sense, a national and not a sectional problem. In the dynamic currents of population movements in our nation, the effects of disfranchisement, unequal treatment, oppression, and degradation in any section are carried throughout all parts of the country, as an infection is carried in the body by the bloodstreams.

Many of the heavy costs of racial discrimination are born inequitably by those sections of our country which are themselves most advanced in the assurance to all of equal opportunity.

Officials of northern states, who are in the forefront of leadership in behalf of civil rights, have tended to rely on local and state actions, while largely overlooking ways in which they might exert their influence upon national policy. They have failed also to perceive or to evaluate fully the grave implications for the economic and political future of their own cities and states inherent in the continued repressiveness and discrimination of parts of the South.

If the influence of the northern states were coordinated and thrown as vigorously into the struggle for federal action on civil rights as the influence of certain southern states has been mobilized in opposition, far-reaching changes might be effected.

The influence of the northern states, for example, might be directed toward securing more effective implementation of existing laws and regulations affecting non-discrimination in the employment policies of firms holding government contracts; to more effective pursuit of federal authority designed to assure the right of Negroes in the south to vote -- perhaps the most important right of all, since this, more than any other single factor, can set in motion forces that will elevate standards of working conditions, wages, social security, welfare services, and every other aspect of the structure of life in that section; to the judicious requirement of non-discrimination as a qualification for federal grants in aid and loans for certain purposes; to the provision of grants in aid for civil rights programs.

The Conference of Governors of Civil Rights States, at present comprising the chief executives of those states having civil rights laws with enforcement features, and currently functioning through a continuations committee, should be made permanent; its membership should be augmented by the addition of governors of all other states having civil rights laws. All these states have a common interest in advancing civil rights as a national objective, both as a matter of principle and as a matter of self-interest. With appropriate organization and adequate staffing, such a permanent conference could function as a clearing house, an educatinnal center, a research center and a lobby, and could make a major contribution to the advancement of civil rights in our nation.

To secure civil rights equally to all our citizens, regardless of race, color, religion or ethnic or national origin is, indeed, the great unfinished business of our democracy. In the global struggle between the forces of totalitarianism and the forces of freedom, the United States stands as acknowledged leader, in the moral as well as the material sense, of the free world. We cannot maintain that leadership unless we demonstrate our will and freedom over tyranny lies the ultimate challenge of building a world in which men can live together in mutual acceptance with respect for differences. We must lay the foundations strongly and well in our land so that we may stand upon a solid base when, at last, that challenge is successfully met.

N A I R O NEWSLETTER

OCTOBER-NOVEMBER, 1958

Almost half of NAIRO's members attended the Twelfth Annual Conference in Pittsburgh (November 19-21); this review of Conference highlights has been prepared for those who could not be with us. On or about January 1, each member will receive a copy of the Conference proceedings containing the full texts of the major speeches and a summary of the various discussion sessions.

CONFERENCE HIGHLIGHTS

A Banquet audience of over 400 gave MARION WRIGHT (Vice-President, Southern Regional Council) a standing ovation after his vigorous denunciation of civil rights and civil liberties violations in the South. Blending keen insight, rich knowledge, and commanding rhetoric in his speech, Mr. Wright lived up to his pre-Conference billing as "an Adlai Stevenson with a Southern accent, who turns out phrases with Churchillian deftness."

CHARLES LIVERMORE (New York SCAD) and FREDERICK ROUTH (Southern Regional Council) set everyone talking with their brilliant exposition of the issues involved in "Toward a Clarification of Goals: Integration or Non-Discrimination." Although both eschewed a debate, they provoked many in subsequent discussion meetings, especially around the moot question of housing quotas.

ARNOLD ARONSON (National Community Relations Advisory Council) keynoted the Conference with his presidential address at the Opening Session. Days later, references were still being made to his thoughtful, farsighted analysis of various mechanisms that might be created to achieve much-needed organization of the field of intergroup relations.

Weary delegates came to life again at the last session when Dr. RICHARD SCAMMON (Director of Elections Research, Governmental Affairs Institute) sketched a national picture of "Population Mobility and Political Change" that gave special attention to implications for intergroup relations. Here again, a brilliant blend of insight and facts fascinated everyone.

Consideration of the "Constructive Use of Intergroup Conflict" (a topic launched by Dr. DAN DODSON, New York University Center for Human Relations, at last year's Conference) was stimulated further by three excellent case studies: Levittown, Pennsylvania (The Rev. DANIEL B. STEVICK, All Saints Episcopal Church, Fallsington); Plainview, New York (ALBERT CHERNIN, N.C.R.A.C.); and Virginia school closings (PAUL RILLING, Virginia Council on Human Relations). Although concurrent discussion meetings followed the luncheon presentation, the subject was not exhausted and is indeed assured a third round at the 1959 Conference.

Interest in the various "how-to" Clinics exceeded even the fondest hopes of the Conference planners; they thus become a permanent feature of NAIRO's annual meetings . . Department and Commission sessions (on topics of their own choosing) were well-planned, well-executed, and well-attended .... The President's Reception in the clubrooms of the Pittsburgh Playhouse was tops, a perfect social climax to three packed days.

TO TAKE YOU TO YOUR LEADERS

MARGARET GARRITY (Midwest Regional Director, President's Committee on Government Contracts, Chicago) took over as President at the final session. Elected to fill out her 1958-1959 team were: President-Elect, FREDERICK B. ROUTH (Assistant Director, Southern Regional Council); Vice-Presidents, GEORGE CULBERSON (Executive Director, Pittsburgh Commission on Human Relations) and WILLIAM GREMLEY (Executive Director, Kansas City Commission on Human Relations); Secretary, MRS. JESSAMINE MERRILL (Executive Director, Trenton, N.J., Council on Human Relations); and Treasurer, BURTON I. GORDIN (Assistant Director, Philadelphia Commission on Human Relations).

The following were elected to three-year terms on the Board of Directors: DR. HELEN AMERMAN (Acting Director, San Francisco Council for Civic Unity); SAMUEL DANIELS (Executive Director, Maryland Commission on Interracial Problems and Relations); LLOYD DAVIS (Executive Director, Catholic Interracial Council, Chicago); FRANK FAGER (Executive Director, Board of Community Relations, Toledo); ARTHUR JOHNSON (Executive Secretary, Detroit NAACP); and MRS. MILDRED MAHONEY (Chairman, Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination).

The Rev. BENJAMIN SISSEL (Associate Secretary, Department of Social Education and Action, Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A.) was elected to fill the unexpired term (one year) of the late FRANCIS MC PEEK.

OUR BY-LAWS REVISED

By unanimous vote, three of the four proposed By-Laws changes were adopted at the Annual Meeting. The result:

(1) Any member in good standing is now eligible for nomination and election as an Officer -- abolishing the previous requirement that he be a member of the present or outgoing Board of Directors.

(2) Eight Regional Chairmen from eight geographic regions may now be appointed by the President, all serving as ex officio members of the Board. (Previous number: 4).

(3) A new category of Student Member has been established for persons "enrolled in a recognized college or university and working toward a degree with the intention of entering the field of intergroup relations." Student Members will receive all Association publications and services but may not vote or hold office. The Board of Directors subsequently established the annual Student dues at $5.00 per year.

Deferred until the next annual meeting was the proposal to provide for the nomination and election of Regional Chairmen. They will - at least for the coming year - continue to be appointed by the President.

* NAIRO notes with a profound sense of loss the death on November 7 of the Reverend *
* FRANCIS MC PEEK, Vice-President of the Association and Executive Director of the *
* Chicago Commission on Human Relations. Long a worker in the service of God and *
* man, he will be missed by a great many people in many walks of life throughout * * the country but certainly no more than by his fellow Chicagoans and by the whole *
* intergroup relations profession.

* * * *

* With the same sorrow and emptiness, NAIRO must also note the death on November 8 *
* of R. MAURICE MOSS, long-time member of the Association and the Associate Director* * of the National Urban League. A veteran intergroup relations worker whose ser- * * vice antedated the birth of the "profession," he too leaves mourning friends in * * national professional circles. *

FRANCIS W. MC PEEK

FRANCIS W. MC PEEK was Executive Secretary of the Chicago Commission on Human Relations for the past 5½ years. Prior to that, he had served for six years as Industrial Relations Secretary of the Council for Social Action, Congregational Christian Churches. Other posts included six years as Director of the Department of Social Welfare, Washington (D.C.) Federation of Churches, and three years as Chaplain to the National Training School for Boys, Federal Bureau of Prisons. Mr. McPeek was a graduate of Ohio State University and McCormick Theological Seminary, and was ordained to the Congregational Christian ministry in 1938.

He died in Chicago at the age of 47, survived by his widow and two sons. At the time of his death, he was Vice-President of NAIRO and a member of its Board of Directors.

Mrs. McPeek lives at 2431 West 175th Street, Homewood, Illinois.

R. MAURICE MOSS

RICHARD MAURICE MOSS, for ten years Associate Executive Director of the National Urban League, spent his entire life in the service of that organization. Graduating from Columbia College in 1919, he became an apprentice at National Urban League headquarters in New York City while attending the New York School of Social Work as an Urban League Fellow. He later served as the chief executive of local Leagues in Toledo, Ohio; Baltimore, Maryland; and Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania - remaining in the last named post for 19 years. In Pittsburgh and later in New York, he served on a large number of public commissions and private agency boards; his NAIRO posts included, among others, chairmanship of the Nominating Committee (1955) and of the National Private Services Department (1954, 1955).

He died in Brooklyn at the age of 61, survived by his widow, two children, and three grandchildren. Mrs. Moss lives at 542 Decatur Avenue, Brooklyn, New York.

NEWSLETTER - 6

WHEN WE GO MARCHING IN (TO THE SAINTS)

The Conference approved Board selection of San Juan, Puerto Rico as the site for the Thirteenth Annual Conference -- October 13-16, 1959. Not the junket that this might be for other professional groups, the trip to Puerto Rico was voted as an important aid to the work of many NAIRO members in Northern urban centers. JOSEPH MONSERRAT (Migration Division, Commonwealth of Puerto Rico Labor Department) extended the invitation for NAIRO's first meeting away from the mainland (and NAIRO's first four-day Conference).

Acting on a recommendation from the membership, the Board voted selection of San Francisco as the site of the Fifteenth Annual Conference in November, 1961. HELEN AMERMAN (Council for Civic Unity) had originally invited NAIRO to the West Coast in 1960, but the membership demurred at two distant meetings in successive years.

Bids are now being accepted for the 1960 (Fourteenth Annual) Conference site. This too will be a four-day meeting.

CONFERENCE ODDS AND ENDS

Delegates came from 26 states and the District of Columbia. Total registration exceeded 300, with approximately 230 members in attendance. NAIRO added 17 new members, boosting our total to an all-time high of 4 5 2.

NAIRO adopted its first major Statement on Civil Rights, which received modest press coverage. Members are asked to disseminate it as widely as possible, and copies are being mailed to them for that purpose.

Twelve of the fourteen interns in training during 1958-9 came to Pittsburgh for the week of November 16-22, the first week of their Internship Seminar. Dr. ROBERT B. JOHNSON (Research Director, National Conference of Christians and Jews) led the Seminar sessions, which were interspersed with attendance at Conference meetings. The second week of the Seminar will take place in June.

Dear John:

Thanks for your letter of the 22nd. Glad that you and Frankye plan to make the letter acknowledging receipt of dues purty. Glad to hear, too, that the December issue of the NAIRO Newsletter will carry excerpts from the letter Mr. Wright sent me.

I will patiently wait until 1959 for the membership roster. It is for my own use, but no sense in burdening NAIRO with the bill for a set of cards. There is only a few weeks before the '59 roster is due, and nothing I plan is so urgent that it can't wait that long.

I hope you are planning to stop off in Atlanta on your way to Miami. There are a number of things I would like to talk over with you so, in case you need an official excuse, you could confer with the President-elect.

I had not heard about the ruckus between the Dade County Council and other intergroup agencies in Miami. I was in Miami during the Christmas holidays but couldn't get in touch with Bill Williams. In what way is our intern, Jane Leeds, serving as the catalyst of the ruckus? A little stirring up, properly done, is probably healthy for the Miami situation. I will be interested in what you find on your visit there.

All good wishes for the coming new year.

Cordially,

Frederick B. Routh

22 December 1958

Dear Fred:

I appreciate recent notes from you and will proceed to comment on all of them.

Our 1959 Membership Roster will be available towards the end of January. In the meantime, the mimeographed 1958 roster has become quite inaccurate and out of date; our supply is in any case exhausted. If your need for a roster is urgent, we can have our mail house run off a galley sheet or a set of cards that will provide you with a complete listing. If this is for your personal use, NAIRO will happily foot the bill; if it is for SRC's use, we will just as happily let them reimburse us for the addressing charge. Please advise.

Frankye and I agree with your comment on our form letter acknowledging receipt of dues. The appearance comes from mimeographing on slick letter bond. This can and will be remedied - in one of two ways - as soon as our new letterheads are printed. It will then look purty.

The December issue of the NAIRO Newsletter will carry excerpts from the article sent to you by Mr. Wright. And I will try to remember to send him a copy of same.

I assume that Maggie has written to you asking your advice on the choice of a regional chairman for the South East. I suggested, and she is considering, Bill Williams in Miami. Haskell Lazere is another possibility, but you might have better thoughts. Incidentally, I gather from several sources that DCCCR is having some ruckus with the other intergroup agencies in Miami, and it seems that Jane Leeds is the catalyst. My visit there in February should be "interesting."

Best wishes.

Sincerely,

John

TO: NAIRO Board of Directors

FROM: John Lassoe, Jr.

SUBJECT: Next Board of Directors Meeting

The Board of Directors will hold its next meeting in Chicago at Margaret Garrity's office on Firday and Saturday, March 6 and 7. An agenda will be mailed out two weeks before the meeting.

The Board's June meeting will be held in New York on the Friday and Saturday immediately preceding the second-week Internship Seminar. Dates will be announced as soon as they have been set.

* * * * *

It is wonderful to be able to inform you that NAIRO has received a grant of over $15,000 (i.e. stock with a current market value of $15,750) for the administration of the Internship Program during its third year (1959-1960). The donor is an individual who chooses to remain anonymous.

Since the Board has already authorized continuation of the program for a third year, I shall proceed without delay to approach various foundations (those currently participating and others) for training grants to be awarded to internship agencies. I presume that the selection of agencies will continue to rest with the foundations and that the agencies will continue to choose their own interns.

With this good news in mind, it is appropriate to wish you a New Year filled with happiness and achievement.

Dear John:

Delighted to hear that you will be stopping in Atlanta on your trip to Florida. Either time that you mentioned will be convenient for me.

I am enclosing a check from Haskell Lazere for his 1959 dues. I have suggested to Maggie that he be appointed Southeastern Regional Chairman.

I will make the March Board meeting but will be late in arriving for I have a speaking engagement at Perdue University on March 6, and it is difficult to get from there to Chicago. But I will be there for the Friday evening dinner and Saturday.

Best regards.

Dear Fred:

By now you know that our Chicago Board meeting will be held on March 6 and 7. It is my present plan (unless it is convenient for no one but me) to go from Chicago to Louisville, then to Atlanta, Miami, perhaps San Juan, and Washington. I cannot make this trip before the Board meeting but could wait for a few weeks after it if that seems advisable. I do plan to stop in Atlanta in any case.

It is hard to synthesize the somewhat vague reports I have received from Miami but it boils down to something like this: Jane Leeds circulated a memo among the local professionals as part of an internship report. In this, she took issue with their real or alleged criticism of the DCCR. This has been answered by at least one person, Seymour Samett, who sent me a copy of his reply - also circulated among the professionals. This may be a teapot tempest, but I sense rather deep feelings. And you know Jane!

Best wishes.

Sincerely,

John

Here is an answer by return mail to your letter of March 30, which just arrived.

By far the best date for me for the meeting with the Resources and Planning Committee is Saturday, April 18, in Washington. I will be in Washington for the National Civil Liberties Clearing House meeting - at least the 17th. I will be in Virginia prior to this. It would be most convenient for me to stay over in Washington for a Saturday meeting.

I was happy to have you visit me here in Atlanta, and I believe we accomplished some helpful things.

Best wishes. I hope to see you in Washington.

We are thinking of dates around those of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House Conference, and would like your reaction to them -- noting that they are suggested for various cities:

(1) Wednesday, April 15, in Washington, D.C.

(2) Saturday, April 18, in Washington.

(3) Saturday, April 18, in New York

(4) Monday, April 20, in New York

SUBJECT: Selection of 1960 NAIRO Conference Site

You are asked to vote on the enclosed bids, to select the site of our 1960 Conference. You need write only the name of Cincinnati or Des Moines on the enclosed postcard, sign it, and return to the NAIRO office.

At the meeting of the Board on March 6-7, it was voted to reject the other bids then in hand (Detroit and Miami) and to limit the choice to Cincinnati and Des Moines. Since Cincinnati's bid was not then formal and official, the Board directed the Executive Secretary to poll the entire Board if and when such a bid was submitted. This having been received, both are transmitted to you for your vote.

Please reply.

Mr. John V.P. Lassoe, Jr.
Executive Secretary, NAIRO

New York 36, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Lassoe:

The Cincinnati Intergroup Agency Council wishes to extend a cordial invitation to the Board of Directors of the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials, to hold its 1960 annual conference in Cincinnati.

The Intergroup Agency Council, consists of professional staff members of the following agencies: The Urban League, National Conference of Christians and Jews, Jewish Community Relations Committee, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, American Jewish Committee, Fellowship House, and Mayor's Friendly Relations Committee.

We feel that our city has much to offer as a conference city. Centrally located as we are, half the nation's population can reach Cincinnati overnight. Cincinnati is served by twenty-one divisions of eight main trunk line railways and most of the major air lines.

During our usually mild winters, good highways make travel by automobile an attractive possibility for agency staffs. Reduced traveling expenses induce greater attendance.

Adequate hotel facilities are available with rates that meet the present price level. Enclosed is an invitation from the beautiful Netherland Hilton Hotel, setting forth facilities that can be made available to the conference.

The hotel is located in the heart of the downtown business district, surrounded by department stores, restaurants, and shopping facilities of all kinds.

It is the opinion of the Intergroup Agency Council that a NAIRO conference in Cincinnati would have a highly beneficial effect upon the continuing improvement of intergroup relations in our city, and the surrounding metropolitan area.

Sincerely,

/s/ Virginia Coffey

Dear Mr. Lassoe:

On behalf of the Des Moines Commission on Human Rights and private agencies in our City, I hereby extend an official invitation to NAIRO's Board of Directors offering Des Moines as a site for NAIRO's 1960 Annual Conference.

Since the conference this year will be held in Puerto Rico and the 1961 conference will be in San Francisco, we feel that Des Moines would be the ideal spot, geographically, for 1960! But more appealing than its central location are such factors as the following:

(1) It is one of the few Capital cities in the Midwest where there are no racial or religious restrictions in any of its restaurants, hotels or places of public accommodation.

(2) It has one of the most liberal newspapers in the Nation. The Des Moines Register and Tribune has won citations from A.D.L., A.C.L.U., and others for its stories and editorials on housing, fair employment, Civil Rights, etc. The NAIRO Conference would get thorough coverage and publicity. (Examples of the paper's hard-hitting editorials on housing are enclosed.)

(3) A welcoming address by our Iowa Governor and City Officials.

(4) Invitations during the conference for NAIRO officials to appear on popular TV programs on Stations KRNT and WHO, as well as Radio Station KWDM.

(5) The cooperation of numerous Des Moines citizens and public and private agencies with the Des Moines Commission on Human Rights acting as host to NAIRO.

Mr. John Lassoe
N.A.I.R.O.

(6) Interesting tours of our State Capitol, Historical Building, and Agricultural research and experimental stations. A chance for some conferees to see an Iowa farm.

(7) The facilities of the Hotel Fort Des Moines, which has been the City's host to many regional and national conventions, are available. Accommodations at the Fort Des Moines have been tentatively reserved for NAIRO on November 8, 9, 10 and 11, 1960. The Fort Des Moines has thirty-four convention rooms of ample size to accommodate from 10 to 700 persons for food functions and from 10 to 1,000 for meetings. Rates for sleeping rooms:

Single - - - - - - -	$ 6.00 - 12.00
Double - - - - - - - -	9.50 - 15.00
Twin - - - - - - - - -	12.50 - 15.00

(8) An up-to-date modern airport with scheduled flights on United, Braniff and Ozark Airlines. Rock Island Railroad connections to all points, U.S.A.

There are other points which could be made in our invitation, but I feel enough have been listed to convince the Board of our desire and ability to serve as host. One final argument should be made, however, and that is that smaller cities such as Des Moines (230,000 population) also need NAIRO and the kind of professional and educational impact it can instill during its four day Annual Conference.

Respectfully submitted,

/s/ Malcolm B. Higgins, Executive Secretary

It was good to see you while I was in New York. I appreciated your good food, your good martinis, and your good company - in that ascending order.

I some time ago received a letter from Bill Karp regarding the proposed Leadership Conference on the Future of NAIRO. Dear John:

Paul Rilling and I have read the form letter for first-time applicants. It is a good, comprehensive job. We offer the following suggestions for whatever they are worth:

(1) Under "Geography: on page 2, a note on the South might be in order, pointing out that most, if not all, positions are with private agencies, generally one-or two-man offices, preference given to Southern applicants, particularly for field work, etc.

(2) Under "Education," we wonder whether too much emphasis isn't given to M.A. status, and whether fields of study nught not to include religion.

(3) On page 4, is it really candid to say that intergroup agencies simply do not hire on a quota basis? Many agencies have what amounts to a quota system, however benevolent it may be.

(4) Also on page 4, you might add another personal quality to suggest the breadth and variety required of a good intergrouper -- "broad general understanding of people and community structure" or something of the sort. Rilling makes the point that the "generalist" should be encouraged.

I hope these random suggestions will be of some help. All the best.

Sincerely,

Harold C. Fleming

Re: Lassoe Letter

1. My major suggestion here would be some amplification on the South on p. 2 under "Professional Career Opportunities," Geography. A note to the effect that most Southern positions (if not all) are with private groups, generally one or two man offices, preference given to Southern applicants, etc.

2. Under "education," I would say too much emphasis is given to M.A. status. Field of study or emphasis perhaps too limited. Religion, social sciences generally excluded. Of what value would Public Administration study be in this field ? Little I would say (I have MA in Public Administration, or rather this was my major field in Pol. Sci. in MA program) -

3. Note on p. 4 under personal that agencies do not use quota system in employment not strictly honest.

4. Under "personal qualifications" for such work, p. 4-- I would add something more but don't know how to word it-- perhaps such as "imagination," or "ability to plan creatively," or some such thing. Perhaps "broad general understanding of people and community structure, etc." Somewhere it should be emphasized that this is a field of variety and breadth. This is true and would appeal to some "generalist" types (like me).

PR - Advice?

Mr. Harold C. Fleming
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
63 Auburn Avenue, N.E.
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Harold:

I have prepared the following form letter to answer the continuing flow of inquiries from people seeking their first jobs (at whatever level) in intergroup relations. I would appreciate your comments and suggestions for revision before we reproduce it in quantity. From your experience and from your agency viewpoint, do you think that it is good advice?

I have tried to summarize here the best information and advice that I can offer those interested in a career in the field of intergroup relations. I think that you will find it to be fairly comprehensive, but you are welcome to write again if it leaves questions unanswered.

The Field of Intergroup Relations

WHAT IS INTERGROUP RELATIONS? There are almost as many definitions as there are organizations and workers in the field, but there might be general agreement on this: The immediate goals of intergroup relations are the reduction of prejudice and the elimination of discrimination against individuals because of their race, creed, color or national origin. Note that intergroup relations is broader than the term "race relations;" it encompasses interreligious relations and intercultural relations, as well as interracial relations.

An INTERGROUP RELATIONS AGENCY then is an organization whose primary purpose is to advance one or both of the field's goals. Its activities may be largely educational or may, on the other hand, focus on social action. It may concern itself with the needs or problems of one minority group - - or with the problems of all groups. It may be privately supported (memberships, contributions, community chest funds, foundation grants, etc.) or it may be governmental and therefore financed from public funds. Its geographic scope may be national, regional, statewide, citywide or just a single neighborhood.

There are, in any event, 300 intergroup relations agencies with paid professional staff in the United States and - - counting all local affiliates of national organizations - - a total of over 600 separate staffed offices. NAIRO's best estimate is that over 1,400 professional workers are employed full-time by these agencies. Note: These figures include the intergroup relations departments of agencies that have a broader scope (e.g. Department of Racial and Cultural Relations, National Council of Churches).

INTERGROUP RELATIONS IS A YOUNG FIELD. Although several of the national private agencies were established as early as 1906-1920, most intergroup relations agencies have come into existence since World War II. NAIRO, professional association of intergroup relations workers, was founded in 1947.

Professional Career Opportunities

OPENINGS. It has been estimated that resignations, retirement, and agency expansion create some fifty professional openings each year. Perhaps half of these might be open to persons without previous intergroup relations experience, although most would require at least an advanced degree or work experience in some related field. This is not an optimistic picture, given the number of individuals seeking intergroup relations careers, and yet hundreds have found their way into the field -- from a wide variety of education and experience backgrounds.

THE JOBS. An intergroup relations worker might be assigned to one or more of the following: research, complaint investigation, negotiation, community organization, membership recruitment, publicity, writing, program planning, legislative lobbying, fund-raising, administration, leadership training, etc. Or, instead of a functional assignment, he may specialize in a subject area: housing, employment, schools, police-community relations, interreligious relations, etc. In the larger agencies, he may have one function or be assigned to one subject area; in most intergroup relations agencies -- the one-man or two-man offices -- the worker will have many functions covering several subject areas.

GEOGRAPHY. Most intergroup relations agencies are in the Northeast, Midwest, and Far West, although there are growing needs and opportunities in the South. Not too surprisingly, the number of agencies in a city increases in proportion to its size; in the larger cities, one finds more agencies, more jobs ... and more competition.

There are important geographic limitations. Some of the city and state public agencies have residence requirements for all job applicants: one must be a resident when one applies and, in some cases, one must have lived there for one, two or even three years. Other public agencies doe not require residence but give preference to qualified residents. And, everything else being equal, most agencies -- private and public -- prefer to hire someone who already knows the area in which the agency operates. This is especially true of beginning jobs.

Unfortunately, there is another geographic limitation. No agency will hire a staff member without interviewing him, and few agencies have funds with which to bring applicants from any distance for interviews. It is usually true that an applicant cannot be considered for an opening unless he lives in the area or can get to it at his own expense. Agencies regret this fact, but it is a budgetary limitation.

SALARY. There are no set salary standards, maximums or minimums. It is even difficult to generalize about averages. As a rule, however, starting salaries fall in the $4,200 - $5,700 range; middle salaries are in the $5,200 - $8,500 range; and executive salaries in the $7,000 - $15,000 bracket. Salaries will vary according to size of agency, nature of agency, and - at least in the case of public agencies - size of city. Note: Many agencies do not have positions for beginners; the lowest salaried post may require one to three years' experience....

What Must You Offer?

EDUCATION. A college degree is almost essential but, since intergroup relations agencies have few beginners' jobs, it is seldom enough. Without an advanced degree or work experience in a related field, your chances of finding professional employment are very slim, especially in the larger cities.

A master's degree in an appropriate field is helpful. Most agencies will accept this in lieu of one or two years' experience, although some agencies -- notably the Urban Leagues -- require this degree for most positions. A doctorate is impressive but unnecessary, except perhaps for positions in education or research. Appropriate fields? Social work, public administration, sociology, human relations, psychology, anthropology -- and for some positions: law, education, journalism. But any advanced degree is an asset.

EXPERIENCE. Work experience in a related field is still probably the more valuable asset in applying for intergroup relations positions. Related fields? Social work (especially community organization), social welfare, housing, adult education, investigation, personnel, vocational guidance, publicity, journalism, religion, etc. Two years' professional experience in any of those areas would suffice for many starting jobs in intergroup relations -- and it is easier to find beginners' jobs in those other fields.

SERVICE. Agencies are interested in an applicant's volunteer service in intergroup relations, especially if the person has no professional experience. Prior involvement in the program of one or more intergroup relations agencies is a definite asset. Participation in one of the many summer human relations workshops will also be noted favorably by many agencies. Volunteer service and workshop participation are taken as some evidence of real interest in the field; they are also, of course, valuable learning experiences.

PERSONAL. Restrictions or requirements based on sex, age, race or religion are less likely in this field than any other. Although the majority of intergroup relations workers are men, the proportion of women is high -- and women head several public and private agencies. Since many people shift to intergroup relations after years of experience in other fields, the age factor is relatively unimportant if the experience was appropriate. Agencies often seek to build a staff representative of various ethnic and racial groups, but hiring is simply not done on a quota basis. One exception: Religious agencies hire members of their own faith almost exclusively, but even this is not an inflexible rule.

Intergroup relations work is difficult, demanding, and delicate. Although hard to measure, certain personal qualifications are given great weight in the hiring of new workers: (1) Dedication: You will need a sincere and well-motivated belief in the goals of intergroup relations, and you will not be happy in their field unless you are prepared to live your beliefs, to practice as well as preach the treatment of all human beings as individuals.

(2) Emotional Stability: For your own sake, and the sake of the greater good, you must be emotionally stable and mature enough to cope calmly and judiciously with irrational people and trying situations. An angry personal reaction is a luxury that usually has to be sacrificed in this work.

(3) Sensitivity and Perception: The most difficult to assess and perhaps the most difficult to develop, they are also the most important. In intergroup relations, one must be especially sensitive to the feelings of others, the nuances of delicate situations, the "hidden agendas" that people bring to any conference. One must have a high degree of empathy and an ability to assess people and situations accurately and quickly.

How and Where to Look

STEP 1. Contact the intergroup relations agencies in your area, especially those in which you are known. They may have openings, know of openings elsewhere (including "fringe" agencies) or be able to offer sound advice on additional preparation. Affiliates of national agencies may also be in a position to pass your name for consideration when openings arise in other cities.

STEP 2. Consider carefully some of the fruitful and important areas of work on the "fringes" of intergroup relations. These other agencies may offer challenging careers in themselves but should, in any case, help you move later into an intergroup relations agency; many of them are in fields easier to enter than intergroup relations.

Agencies peripheral to intergroup relations would include the following examples, especially if they are located in mixed or changing neighborhoods: settlement houses, community centers, churches, schools, neighborhood associations; social welfare agencies; various city and state government agencies; etc.

If your city is small, you may be able to visit these personally. In larger cities, you might contact the local council of social welfare agencies, the professional placement service of the state employment agency or some of the local coordinating bodies in the various fields.

(If you are unable or unwilling to leave your present community, your search ends when you exhaust the possibilities above.)

STEP 3. If you think that you have appropriate education and experience qualifications, send a resume to the major national organizations and to any of the larger state and local agencies in areas to which you would be willing to move. How to locate these? Buy (for $2) the DIRECTORY OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS AGENCIES WITH PAID PROFESSIONAL STAFF, published by NAIRO in late 1959.

STEP 4. Again, if you have appropriate education and experience, consider joining NAIRO to take advantage of its Personnel Registry. Members listed on the Registry receive prompt notice of all intergroup relations job openings posted with NAIRO (some thirty positions to date in 1959). Annual dues are $15, and cover all NAIRO services and publications. (Membership information available on request.)

STEP 5. Various fields peripheral to intergroup relations maintain their own personnel services, and you might want to register with some of them, depending on your interest and background. Examples are: National Association of Housing and Redevelopment Officials, Community Chests and Councils of America, American Society for Public Administration. Do not overlook the professional placement service maintained by the state employment agencies, some of which even exchange information on openings.

Sincerely,

John Zasoe

TO: NAIRO BOARD OF DIRECTORS

FROM: JOHN V.P. LASSOE, JR.

SUBJECTS: An announcement
A policy decision

(1) JANUARY BOARD MEETING

President Routh has set dates for the January meeting of the Executive Committee and of the Board. Both will be held in Detroit, probably at the Michigan FEPC.

*Executive Committee: Wednesday evening, all Thursday -- January 6-7, 1960
*Board of Directors: All Friday, Saturday morning -- January 8-9, 1960

Agenda and further information will follow in December.

(2) DIRECTORY OF AGENCIES: A POLICY(RE-)DECISION

The Directory of Intergroup Relations Agencies With Paid Professional Personnel is being printed at this moment. We are now faced with a final and somewhat complicated decision on the distribution to NAIRO members.

In San Juan, the Board voted that the Directory would not be given free of charge to members. This was the Board's first policy ruling on this; in Pittsburgh last November, there was considerable discussion but no decision.

Major arguments:

PRO, free distribution to members; We owe them this service, especially since the suspension of the Reporter and Journal during the year reduced the number of NAIRO publications that they have been receiving annually. Free distribution will build goodwill.

CON, no free distribution to members; The Directory is a working tool that agencies should buy for their staff members. Free distribution will cut drastically into our sales and, therefore, our potential revenue.

However, based on the recommendation of the Publications Committee and a ruling by the President (with both of which I concurred), we had earlier informed the membership - - in the October Newsletter - - that each would receive one free copy. In addition (even as we were meeting in San Juan), a letter went to all agencies, accompanying galley proof clips, in which we again noted this fact.

* QUESTION: In view of our twice-printed commitment, and whether or not it was wrong or at least premature, shall the October Board decision stand? In short, shall each NAIRO member receive a free Directory, or must members buy them?

(The Directory will sell for $2.00 ($1.50 in quantity of 10 or more); cost to NAIRO of each copy is just over $1.)

NOTE: A reply card is enclosed for your convenience.

Dear John:

With a heavy heart, I must decline the invitation to participate in the consultation of January 20 - 22. You would have heard from me more promptly, but I have been trying to work out some resolution of the conflict. But, try as I may, the Southern interagency conference -- which SRC convenes -- is still meeting through noon of the 20th; and since one of our philanthropoid friends will be our guest at this meeting, it is pretty important that I be on hand.

Doubtless the South will be well represented without me. But, if you haven't thought of him, let me suggest a Southern intergrouper who is currently in New York and thus would be inexpensive and easy to get. That is Tartt Bell, on leave from his position as director of the AFSC's S. E. Office to serve with the Friends' U. N. staff. Tartt, as you probably know, is one of the ablest and most experienced of the Southern professionals. I strongly recommend him.

On another subject, I thought the summary you sent to Mrs. Eddy was good and clear and concise. A conversation with Fred, subsequent to your meeting with Stephen Currier and Mrs. E., suggests that I failed to make myself clear about that situation. My point was not that Currier & Company are enamoured of the intern program but that they are plumb down on conferences. Thus I was -- and still am -- inclined to feel that the intern business, as an "action" program, offers more hope of success than the consultations or other types of conferences. It may be that you have something else in your kit that is more saleable, involving neither interns nor conferences. If so, by all means fetch it out and push it zealously.

All the best, and Noel!

Dear Harold:

We are writing to invite you to take part, as one of thirty selected intergroup relations practitioners, in a three-day consultation launching what promises to be one of the most exciting projects that NAIRO has undertaken: a one-year program of conferences, study and discussion on the goals, directions and priorities of intergroup relations work in the decade ahead.

The initial consultation will be held in New York City on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, January 20-22, 1960. It has been arranged by NAIRO in cooperation with the American Jewish Committee.

The enclosures outline the plan for that meeting, the topics that we plan to discuss (on which papers are now being written), and the scheme of the year-long program to follow.

All transportation, room and board expenses of consultation participants will be paid by NAIRO and the American Jewish Committee.

We earnestly hope that you will be able to participate and, although we realize only too well the enormous demands on your time, we ask you to plan to be with us for the entire three-day period.

May we hear from you as soon as possible? Time is short, and there are others that we would like to invite if any on our original list cannot accept. However, we are still counting on your favorable reply!

"GOALS, DIRECTIONS AND PRIORITIES IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS IN THE DECADE AHEAD"

A NAIRO PROGRAM FOR 1960

The field of intergroup relations needs to achieve consensus on its goals, directions and program priorities for the next ten years. Effective action depends on carefully planned adjustment to new dimensions of old problems, as well as to new problems created by ever more rapid social change. NAIRO proposes to help intergroup relations professionals and lay leaders arrive at consensus on some of these matters through a one-year program of conferences, study and discussion that will be launched on January 20-22, 1960.

The program has three working goals:

(a) To contribute to a better definition of the field, with special reference to the knowledge, skills and training needed.

(b) To contribute to a better appraisal of those factors in our international, national and community life which are likely, now or in the next ten years, to affect the nature of intergroup relationships.

(c) To contribute to a better understanding of the inter-agency relationships, roles and responsibilities that now exist in the field, and of the adjustments that will be necessary in the years ahead.

This program has five phases:

(1) A January Consultation (New York City), bringing together some thirty leading intergroup relations practitioners and selected experts from related fields for a three-day discussion of key questions and issues likely to influence intergroup relations work in the next decade. Papers, proceedings and pertinent questions will then be sent to the entire field.

(2) Study and discussion of the published material by all NAIRO Commissions, Chapters, Departments, Committees, Regional Meetings, and other professional bodies -- with special attention to definition of the new directions and changing goals.

(3) A second mid-year consultation, involving a different group of leading intergroup relations professionals and experts from related fields in an examination of additional key intergroup relations problems and broader social issues, projected for the decade ahead. Again, papers, proceedings and pertinent questions would be published and distributed to the entire field.

(4) Study and discussion of this material by all NAIRO bodies, especially through regional meetings. Attention will focus on implementation, i.e., what do we as professionals need to do to cope with the new dimensions and new problems?

(5) As the theme of the 1960 NAIRO Annual Conference (Cincinnati: November 15-18), the development of consensus on goals, directions and priorities in intergroup relations. Conference proceedings will be published as a final synopsis of the year's concentrated study and discussion.

"GOALS, DIRECTIONS AND PRIORITIES IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS IN THE DECADE AHEAD"

THE FIRST CONSULTATION: JANUARY 20-22, 1960

WHAT — A three-day consultation will launch NAIRO's year-long program of conferences, study and discussion on the goals, directions and priorities in intergroup relations in the decade ahead. This present meeting will focus on (a) the nature, scope and theory of intergroup relations (Wednesday), and (b) the identification of selected intergroup relations problems of the next decade (Thursday and Friday).

BY WHOM — The consultation has been arranged by NAIRO in cooperation with the American Jewish Committee. Wednesday's sessions form part of the Dedication Week program of the Committee's Institute of Human Relations.

WHEN WHERE — The consultation will be held in New York City on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, January 20-22, 1960. It will begin at 9:00 AM on Wednesday morning at the Institute of Human Relations, 165 East 56th Street. All sessions will be held at the Institute and at another location to be announced.

WHO — Participation is limited to thirty leading intergroup relations professionals and selected experts from related fields, and is by invitation only.

HOW — Utilizing background papers prepared in advance by selected experts, the participants will analyze each of seven topics (see below) to point up the key issues and questions under each. Papers, proceedings and pertinent questions will then be published, probably as a special issue of the JOURNAL OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS.

Schedule and Topics

Wednesday, January 20: "The Nature, Scope and Theory of Intergroup Relations"

Arranged by the Special Committee of the Commission on Nature, Scope & Theory, in cooperation with the American Jewish Committee and the NAIRO Committee on Resources and Planning. PLACE: Institute of Human Relations, New York City. PERSONNEL: 25-30 intergroup relations practitioners, to be invited. SCHEDULE: Three 3-hour sessions -- morning, afternoon, evening.

*MORNING: "The Nature of Intergroup Relations Practice"

We seek to define intergroup relations practice through an analysis of the types of problems dealt with in intergroup relations, including some historical reference to the origin of these problems and to the changing temporal context in which they have been viewed; through a survey of the development of the body of knowledge and methods of intergroup relations; and through some prediction of future problems and the knowledge and methods that must be developed or adapted to meet them.

Paper By: John G. Feild and David Danzig

NAIRO PROGRAM FOR 1960
The First Consultation (2)

*AFTERNOON: "The Organization of the Intergroup Relations Field"

We seek to survey the scope of intergroup relations practice through an analysis of public and private responsibility, including the goals of the wide range of agencies active in the intergroup relations field; through an analysis of factors hampering or spurring public acceptance of intergroup relations practice and goals; and through analysis of the financing of public and private agency work. Our survey of the scope of intergroup relations practice will necessarily include consideration of the limits of the field, our relationship to peripheral disciplines, and some prediction of future changes in scope.

Paper By: Arnold Aronson and Charles Livermore

*EVENING: "The Professionalization of Intergroup Relations Work and Workers"

We seek to analyze factors bearing upon the advancement of the field through professionalization of intergroup relations work: By what standards of performance do we operate as professionals, and by what process will these standards gain general acceptance? What is the body of knowledge and techniques that must be transmitted to new workers, and what is or will be our field's procedure for transmitting this? Since professional standards are so sketchily defined, and professional training still so experimental, in our field, this analysis must include some prediction of future directions and needs.

Dear John:

Just to let you know that I read the two documents you used to support the Taconic appeal, and found them, of course, ably done. The proof is in the putting up, however, and I am awaiting with interest word of the outcome.

If the documents produce the desired result, they are obviously the best. If not, I'll be glad to offer comments toward revised versions that may move the granite-hearted.

Cheers to you under your other hat, as president of ESCRU.

February 24, 1960

Dear Harold:

We submitted the enclosed documents, suitably typed and accompanied by a forthright appeal letter, to the Taconic Foundation last week. Mrs. Eddy suggests that we might have an answer by month's end.

"What Is NAIRO?" is an accurate document, by gum. It is also framed in the light of our conversations with h*i*m.

Our appeal letter indicated that we were asking for $38,000 a year for three years. It also indicated that the three projects could function independently, which is true. If we failed to get the $10,000 grant but received either or both of the other two, we could scrape through the year.

I should welcome your comments and forthright criticism. If we are turned down, in whole or in part, we must approach other foundations. You have a keen eye for effectiveness in written appeals, and I need to have that eye turned mercilessly on these documents.

Did you know that the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity is about to feel the gentle touch of manna raining from the top of the 6's? So John Morris tells me.

Best wishes.

Sincerely,

John

WHAT IS NAIRO?

Paraphrasing Henry Cabot Lodge's comment about the United Nations: if NAIRO did not exist, it would have to be founded. Its role is both important and unique.

The infant field of intergroup relations, scarcely more than a handful of national agencies until World War II, recognized the need for NAIRO as early as 1947 and founded it that year.

Especially because it was a social action field, intergroup relations needed a national organization that would promote communication and exchange of information among staff workers and lay leaders -- across agency lines, across geographic boundaries, regardless of agency scope, and in spite of differing agency program orientations.

> NAIRO national conventions, regional conferences, local Chapters, and study commissions bring together workers and leaders from national, regional, state and local agencies; from educational organizations, action groups and law enforcement agencies; from North, South, East and West; from agencies serving the needs and aspirations of Jews, Negroes, Indians, Japanese Americans, Puerto Rican migrants, and the total community.

NAIRO is not itself an intergroup relations agency and has no program that reaches the general public; it is, therefore, non-competitive. NAIRO has no program goals, other than promoting better intergroup relations practice; it is, therefore, non-partisan in terms of the field's agencies and their different goals.

For all these reasons, and because it is an association of individuals, NAIRO offers the field its one "free forum," where workers and leaders can meet without the encumbrance of agency identification or the need to reflect organizational policy. Experienced and knowledgeable individuals are regularly given the opportunity to arrive at consensus on the broad goals and directions of the field.

Communication and exchange of information are essential in a field where developments in one city can affect rights or relationships in a city 1,000 miles away. Workers and lay leaders need to know what is happening around the country.

Communication and exchange of information are equally important in a field where methods and techniques are still largely experimental, where new problems create demands for new approaches. Those responsible for program need to know how it is being done elsewhere.

Communication and exchange of information become vital in an expanding field that needs to recruit and train new workers, especially for governmental agency posts and increasingly for work in the South. Lacking formal training centers or extensive experience in specialized intergroup relations training, those responsible for new workers need to know how to prepare them for effective work in their agencies.

Communication and exchange of information are crucial in a field where new problems or new dimensions of old problems arise daily. Often isolated, usually buried by the crushing demands of both crisis and routine, workers and lay leaders need help in focusing on new goals and directions, in developing new techniques.

NAIRO provides the channels for all of this, especially for those working in agencies that lack a national parent organization. For state or municipal commissions, for independent local private agencies, for isolated intergroup workers in school systems or social agencies or federal departments, NAIRO performs many of the functions of a parent body.

NAIRO is important to its field.

WHAT DOES NAIRO DO?

NAIRO sponsors a national conference, attended annually by some 250 of the field's 1,400 paid workers. Since the conference site is a different city each year, moving around the country, most of the workers can participate at least once every few years.

> There are Conference by-products beyond the learning and exchange of information that is expected to take place. The work of local agencies is aided by the presence of leading intergroup relations workers from around the country; Pittsburgh, for example, utilized Conference delegates in the last stages of its campaign for a fair housing practices law (1958).

NAIRO publications provide information and material not generally available elsewhere, yet invaluable to the field's workers.

The Reporter, now suspended, provided data on trends and events in intergroup relations until a variety of other publications ("Southern School News," "Trends in Housing," "Race Relations Law Reporter," etc.) gradually filled this gap.

The Journal of Intergroup Relations, a new quarterly, provides thoughtful articles on developments, new concepts and approaches, and significant research in intergroup relations.

The recently-published Directory of Intergroup Relations Agencies With Paid Professional Personnel, first such listing in eleven years, helps workers communicate with their counterparts in other areas, and helps those outside the field learn of its resources.

Civil Rights in the Nation's Capital: A Report on a Decade of Progress, a study published by one of NAIRO's study Commissions in 1959, represents the first systematic survey of intergroup relations in Washington, D.C., since the 1948 report of the National Committee Against Segregation in the Nation's Capital (now defunct).

Even the NAIRO Newsletter, departmental bulletin, public agency budget surveys, and special committee reports offer information that workers cannot get elsewhere -- and seem to need in their daily work.

NAIRO provides important liaison, and often consultation and other services, through the field trips of its executive secretary. In the past two-and-one-half years, for example, he has traveled 47,000 miles to visit 28 cities, many of them four or five times.

He brings news of the field: what is happening, who is doing it, how it is being done. He helps interpret intergroup relations trends and developments to the workers, their Boards, often public gatherings. In press, radio and television interviews, he can -- as an "outside prophet" -- help occasionally in local situations.

For the isolated worker in an unaffiliated agency, he is the equivalent of "our man from national," serving as a consultant, a representative of a nationwide movement, perhaps a factor in morals.

Finally, he is a symbol of professional growth and interagency cooperation. Meeting with local workers, helping to form NAIRO Chapters, and encouraging regional conferences, he stimulates contact across agency lines and a concern with better intergroup relations practice.

NAIRO provides opportunity for exchange through regional meetings, local Chapters, study commissions, departments (formed by type of agency), and committees. In some areas, there are special surveys, seminars and programs. Examples:

* Washington, D.C., civil rights survey (NAIRO Commission on Civil Rights)
* Professional in-service training seminar for all agency workers (Philadelphia)
* Conference on Intergroup Relations in the Decade Ahead (Seattle)
* Board-Professional Institute on Interagency Cooperation (Twin Cities NAIRO)
* Conference on Human Values in Intergroup Relations (Connecticut NAIRO)
* Meeting, "Quotas in Housing: Defensible or Not?" (New York City NAIRO)
* Survey of National Agency Resources Available to Local Groups (Committee on Interdepartmental Cooperation)

Through its Personnel Registry, its internship training program, and consultation, NAIRO helps in the training and recruitment of new personnel, the raising of standards of performance, the filling of important job vacancies.

* NAIRO posted 34 job openings in 1959 and 12 during the first month of 1960; it was directly responsible for filling perhaps one-third of the 1959 vacancies listed.

* NAIRO helped in the preparation of job descriptions for new public agencies in Indianapolis, Elizabeth, N.J., Omaha, Washington, D.C., among others.

* NAIRO coordinated the training of 31 interns in 1957-1959 and is working now with seven more. All but a few of the trainees remained in intergroup relations work.

* NAIRO's executive secretary has personally counseled over 150 persons interested in intergroup relations careers, countless more by mail.

* NAIRO has influenced and sometimes shaped staff training programs in over thirty intergroup relations agencies, largely as a by-product of the internship program.

Through its newest program, initiated in 1960, NAIRO is helping the field arrive at consensus on the goals, directions and priorities in intergroup relations for the decade ahead. National consultations, local and regional meetings, publication of proceedings, and NAIRO's Annual Conference are all being utilized in the process of setting new sights for intergroup relations work.

Despite limited staff, NAIRO attempts to answer requests for information received from members, agencies, educational institutions, governmental bodies, and increasingly students and the general public.

Samples:

* How can we organize a public human relations commission? or a private human relations council? (Recurring constantly, this is the major inquiry received.)
* What are operating budgets and salary scales for agencies in comparable cities or states?
* How many local affiliates of the American Dental Society are integrated; when was this accomplished?
* How many municipal intergroup relations agencies have subpoena powers?
* What criteria have been developed for evaluating agency program effectiveness?
* What are some examples of successful housing integration around the country? (Referred to National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing.)

HOW DOES NAIRO FUNCTION?

Little in NAIRO's structure is unique, unless it be the high degree of member participation and the growing tendency to center its committees in various cities on a rotating basis.

Commissions, organized around areas of substantive interest, study and report on developments, new approaches, and new techniques. They issue reports and organize panel sessions at the Annual Conference.

* Housing and Family Life
* Education
* Civil Rights
* Manpower Utilization
* Interreligious Relations
* Research Services
* Nature, Scope & Theory of Intergroup Relations

Departments, organized by type of agency, exchange information on developments and working methods, as a means of aiding workers in their day-by-day duties. They publish occasional newsletters and organize panel sessions at the Annual Conference.

* Local and State Private Agencies
* State Public Agencies
* Municipal Agencies
* National Private Agencies
* Federal Services

Committees, organized to cope with the usual administrative or housekeeping tasks, include at least four established to deal with substantive matters:

* Educational and Professional Training Committee
* Professional Standards Committee
* Special Interdisciplinary Committee (project on development of interdisciplinary exchange and cooperation in Chicago)
* Committee on International Exchange and Affairs

Chapters, authorized by the membership at the recent Annual Meeting, will formalize the relationship to NAIRO of informal local NAIRO groups now active in the following cities:

* Philadelphia
* Michigan-Detroit
* San Francisco-Bay Area
* Washington, D.C.
* Chicago
* Los Angeles
* Minneapolis-St. Paul
* Pittsburgh

Regions: NAIRO has divided the country into eight regions, and annually appoints a regional chairman for each. The purpose is to encourage regional meetings, develop local Chapters, insure adequate expression of regional views in NAIRO, and interpret NAIRO to all parts of the country.

Board of Directors, elected by the membership at the Annual Conference (with over one-third of the members present and voting), governs NAIRO between yearly meetings. It meets quarterly -- with an average of two-thirds of the directors attending, at their own expense.

Staff: As of January, 1960, the staff of NAIRO consisted of an executive secretary, an office secretary, and a part-time clerk. The editor of the JOURNAL receives a fee for his editorial services. All other labor is contributed by the members and officers.

APPENDIX

NAIRO'S GOALS, DIRECTIONS, AND PRIORITIES, 1960-1962

NAIRO currently seeks grants and gifts totaling $38,000 annually for three years, 1960 through 1962, as partial subsidization of its present operation and as support for staff expansion in two important areas.

Its basic assumption and considered judgment are that the three-year subsidy will permit NAIRO to become self-supporting at its present level of operation; the two new programs will contribute to that process and will be designed to become self-supporting themselves or be self-liquidating.

The specific projects for which funds are sought are, in priority order:

(1) As partial subsidization of present operations $10,000

- Subsidy for JOURNAL OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS
- Subsidy for other new publications
- Subsidy for local services and Chapters

(2) Associate Director, and related expenses $15,000

(3) Informational Services Program, with staff $13,000

The nature of each project and the need it would fill are outlined below, and described in some detail on attached pages.

NAIRO anticipates that expenses will exceed income by $19,000 in 1960, but - as shown in the attached budget statement - some $7,000 of this represents special program expenses that can and will be covered through use of reserve funds. An operating deficit of $12,000 is anticipated, therefore, although a three-year average (1960-1962) is calculated at $10,000 annually.

Since the establishment of the National Office in 1957, income from sources other than foundations has increased from $7,033.47 to an estimated $18,800 (1960). Expenditures have increased at a much slower pace, despite considerable program expansion, and the annual "deficit" (met in the past by grants or gifts) has been whittled down from a high of $21,000 (1958) to the anticipated $12,000 (1960, again excluding special program outlays).

The sharp increase in income from sources other than foundations has come primarily from dues of a rapidly-increasing membership and from heavy publication sales. The careful projection that NAIRO can become self-supporting in three years is based on continued growth in revenue from these two sources, together with the development of special services rendered on a fee basis.

The Journal of Intergroup Relations is a unique publication, apparently much-needed by the field. Initial response suggests that a paid circulation of over 2,500 can be obtained in three years, with a substantial net return to NAIRO. Since it is distributed free to members, it also serves as a strong membership incentive.

There is a need for special publications like the Directory of Agencies and Civil Rights in the Nation's Capital, both published in 1959. The initial outlay represents serious drain on NAIRO's operating budget, however, and the financial return depends on sales which may continue for years. NAIRO seeks the equivalent of a revolving fund for publication of unique pamphlets.

Development of membership, while aided by publications, depends in large degree on services rendered locally and on active participation in such tangible programs as NAIRO Chapters offer. Increased travel by elected officers and staff, and funds for occasional aid to local activities, will both expand the effectiveness of NAIRO in its unique role and attract the new members that will help it become self-sustaining.

These are described in APPENDIX A.

Vital to both the development of NAIRO and its continued service to the field is staff time and travel. Despite time and energy expended freely by NAIRO members, such activities as national and regional meetings, committee work, commission studies, local Chapter development, preparation of publications, and internship training need the services or at least coordination of full-time staff. NAIRO has grown to the point where one professional worker cannot cope with nationwide demands for time and travel.

High priority is given to the employment of an Associate Director, with funds for secretarial services and travel. He would share with the Executive Secretary general responsibility for all aspects of program, with special emphasis on direct service to members and agencies through field trips and on the organization of regional and local activities.

New projects now contemplated, including the development of special services to agencies on a fee basis, suggest that NAIRO may be able to absorb the associate directorship into its regular budget after the proposed three-year project. In any case, the early staff attention given to local and regional programs will make them infinitely more self-sustaining if staff must be reduced at the project's end. Speaking developmentally, this is the time when NAIRO needs professional help, and the field itself is, in many ways, at the same stage.

This project is described more fully in APPENDIX B.

Perhaps less urgent but no less important is the need to develop within NAIRO an informational services program to handle the growing number of requests for materials and factual data. Inquiries fall into two categories: those seeking information already available from intergroup relations agencies or other sources, and those seeking information not presently available from any source. To handle the former, NAIRO's proposed service would have to find out exactly what information was available and where such inquiries might be referred. To cope with the latter, it would be necessary to do the research and prepare the material, sometimes in pamphlet form, thus answering the inquiry but also making the information available to others with similar interest.

This three-year project will focus on the informational needs of workers in the field, lay leaders, institutions, citizens' groups, governmental bodies, and organizations in other fields. Most inquiries from students and the general public could be referred to existing agencies, if one but knew where to refer them. NAIRO does not propose to duplicate any agency services or publications; there are enough informational needs that have not yet been met to occupy fully the proposed staff person's time.

The service would meet one of two fates in 1962: support thereafter by existing agencies or liquidation if it has filled the informational gaps and can routinize referrals.

It is described in APPENDIX C.

These then are the projects to which NAIRO attaches greatest importance in its efforts to expand and improve its unique service to a field that has so many challenges and so many needs. The total budget, combining the normal operating income and the suggested project grants, would amount to approximately $57,000 --- less than .003% of the estimated $21,000,000 spent annually by intergroup relations agencies. Not one dollar in that modest budget would be spent on a program or service now provided by an existing agency.

APPENDIX A

PARTIAL SUBSIDIZATION OF PRESENT OPERATIONS: $10,000

(1) The JOURNAL OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS is a printed quarterly initiated by NAIRO in January, 1960, to fill a gap in published material presently available to intergroup relations workers and lay leaders.

It will present regularly articles on significant developments in the field, trends in intergroup relations work, and new techniques for dealing with changing problems. These articles will be written for the most part by professional workers -- rather than by social scientists whose research is already available in learned journals. It will be in essence an aid to effective action.

The JOURNAL is given to NAIRO members without charge. It will be sold to others at an annual subscription rate of $6. A paid circulation of 2,000 is expected to make the JOURNAL self-supporting; subscriptions over that figure will begin to produce operating income for NAIRO.

It is hoped that the break-even point can be reached in two years; a paid circulation of 2,500 or even 3,000 in three years. In the meantime, the JOURNAL will cost NAIRO $6,060, on the following budget:

Printing	$3,060
Editorial Services*	2,000
Distribution	500
Promotion	500
	$6,060

(* Paid to editor; articles are contributed)

Because of its value to the field, NAIRO has launched the JOURNAL with money from its operating budget. Because of the severe financial strain that this represents, NAIRO seeks an annual subsidy of $6,000 for three years, until the JOURNAL becomes at least self-supporting.

(2) There is a need for occasional special publications that NAIRO is best suited to prepare and publish as part of its unique service to the field.

Examples: "Civil Rights in the Nation's Capital: A Report on a Decade of Progress" (1959) - special survey by NAIRO's Commission on Civil Rights, and the first such study of Washington, D.C., integration and desegregation since 1948.

"Directory of Intergroup Relations Agencies With Paid Professional Personnel (1959) - first such listing published in eleven years.

While these can and will be sold, hopefully at a modest profit to NAIRO, the initial outlay of approximately $2,400 apiece represents another severe strain on NAIRO's budget. The return from sales may stretch over a period of several years.

There are, in addition, instances where it would be to the field's best interests to be able to offer the pamphlets without charge or, at least, at cost. This is seldom possible where operating budget has been committed.

The Washington, D.C., study is a case in point: published initially as a mimeographed report to NAIRO members only, it was reissued as a printed pamphlet at the request of Washington and other Southern professionals, for circulation as an answer to charges that desegregation was not working and could not work. Because of its importance, NAIRO is selling the pamphlet - in bulk - at cost; it has not yet paid for itself.

Among Publications Contemplated

(a) A guide to the formation of public human relations commissions and citizens' human relations councils. (This would answer some of the questions received most frequently by NAIRO.)
(b) A biennial revision of the directory of agencies, to keep this important reference piece up-to-date.
(c) A report on guidance, training and apprenticeship factors affecting minority group employment (copy prepared by NAIRO Manpower Utilization Commission but not yet published).
(d) A guide to intergroup relations services of national agencies available to local agencies and citizens' groups (material now being collected).
(e) A survey of intergroup relations research needs (material now being collected by NAIRO Research Services Commission).

NAIRO seeks, for three years, an annual publications subsidy of $2,500 to permit preparation and printing of pamphlets. It commits itself to at least one such publication each year.

Such a subsidy would perpetuate itself after the three-year period as a revolving publications fund. The sales return is too slow to permit less than a three-year margin, but publications income after the first three years would insure continued activity in the pamphlet field.

(3) Communication and exchange of information occur best through face-to-face discussion, and there is no substitute for local and regional meetings. In recent years, NAIRO has given high priority to the formation of local chapters, the organization of regional meetings, and the development of city-based study commissions.

There are informal local NAIRO groups (now to become Chapters) in eight cities, but these need program help. There are, in addition, at least ten other cities where such groups might be formed. NAIRO has eight regions, at varying levels of activity, but only one held a regional conference last year. City-based commissions have functioned in several cities, but their progress has been slow.

Development of local program activity needs greater stimulation by NAIRO officers, regional chairmen, and staff. Their modest travel allowances represent another strain on the budget, and yet the importance of this direct aid cannot be ignored. Local and regional groups also need more services and materials, even occasional financial aid in arranging local meetings or regional conferences.

NAIRO seeks, for three years, an annual subsidy of $1,500 for travel and other expenses designed to help local programs. The return in new members and increased member participation will make this operation more than self-sustaining by 1962. In the meantime, there will be substantial and direct benefit to the field and its workers.

Again, the unique role of NAIRO becomes important: local or regional NAIRO meetings, by definition, bring together workers and leaders from all types of agencies -- and free them to consider intergroup relations problems without restrictions of agency policy.

As a subsidy for present NAIRO operations, $10,000 is sought annually for three years:

JOURNAL OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS	$6,000
Other Publications	2,500
Aid to Local Program Activity	1,500
	$10,000

APPENDIX B

ASSOCIATE DIRECTOR

NAIRO seeks funds to employ an Associate Director for a three-year period, on an annual supplementary budget of $15,000.

BUDGET (ANNUAL)

Salary, Associate Director	$ 8,000
Secretarial Services	3,600
Travel Allowance (75-90 days in the field)	2,500
Employee Benefits (Associate Director & Secretary: Social Security, Hospitalization Insurance; Associate Director: 5% Severance Pay Reserve for first two years)	900
Office Space (Chicago)*	---
	$15,000

(* At least experimentally, the Associate Director will operate out of Chicago, to offer greater service to Midwestern workers and agencies, and to reduce travel costs. Office space there will be donated by a social welfare agency.)

The Associate Director will share with the present executive responsibility for the following activities:

* Liaison and Communication: Field trips to bring to workers and agencies information about developments, trends, new techniques, and program activity in other parts of the country; to help in the organization of local groups and special NAIRO programs; and to gather data on the field's needs.

* Development of Consensus on Goals: In 1960, NAIRO will focus special attention on discussions leading to consensus on the goals, directions and priorities in intergroup relations for the next decade. A vital part of this process will be the stimulation of local and regional groups, to study questions developed at national consultations. In 1961 and 1962, the process will continue, but with increasing emphasis on the interpretation of this to other disciplines and the general community.

* Training and education: The Internship Program is but one aspect of NAIRO's concern with the recruitment and preparation of new workers. In addition to giving overall supervision to the individual intern training programs, NAIRO seeks to help develop special staff seminars, to encourage educational institutions to offer better educational programs for intergroup relations workers, and to stimulate veteran professionals to draw together the knowledge and techniques that they have developed in this embryo field, for transmission to others.

* Organization: The Annual Conference, the various committees, the Departments, and the study commissions need service if they are to function successfully. Scattered as they are across the country, these various bodies require considerable attention through field trips and correspondence.

APPENDIX B (2)

In approving the employment of an Associate Director, NAIRO's Board accepted two alternatives for 1962:

(a) Additional staff time will have stimulated the various NAIRO bodies (organizationally and programmatically) to the point where they will be able to operate with fewer staff field services. Field services and other help from NAIRO officers and regional chairmen will be generated by better organization at the local and regional levels. NAIRO will be able to function without an Associate Director, or

(b) Membership will have grown to a figure exceeding present 1962 goals; agency services - on a fee basis - will have been developed by NAIRO along lines so important to the present existence of such bodies as the National League for Nursing or the National Association of Housing and Redevelopment Officials; new special projects will have begun; and NAIRO will be able to absorb the Associate Director into its regular operating budget.

There will be no delay in the organization and implementation of this project. NAIRO's Executive Committee has already approved the choice of Lloyd Davis, its present Vice-President, as Associate Director.

Lloyd Davis is executive secretary of the Catholic Interracial Council of Chicago, and has held that post since 1953. Presently NAIRO's vice-president, he has also served as 1959 Conference Program Chairman, as 1958 chairman of the Department of Local Private Agencies, and as an officer in Chicago NAIRO.

Although only 31, he is chairman of the forthcoming Annual Convention of the Catholic War Veterans, First Vice Commander of the CWV of Illinois, executive committee member of the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice, and a part-time instructor in sociology at Loyola University.

He has accepted the three-year appointment, if the post is created.

APPENDIX C
